III—Wisdom for Others

<sup>5</sup> It is not enough to acquire wisdom, it is necessary to employ it. (Non paranda nobis solum ea sed fruenda etiam est.)

CICERO, De Finibus. Bk. i, sec. 1. (50 B.C.)
Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 24.

<sup>6</sup> He has learnt how to speak to others but not to himself. (Apud alios loqui videlicet didicerat, non multum ipse secum.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v, ch. 36, sec. 104. (45 B.C.) Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 24.

And though no man may for himself prove wise,
He can give others aid when others' perils rise.
(E benchè l' uom non prenda buon consiglio, Donar lo puote nell' altrui periglio.)

BOCCACCIO, Il Filostrato. Canto ii, st. 10. (c. 1350) Cummings, tr. CHAUCER, Troilus, i, 630, translates this: "A fool may eek a wys man ofte gyde."

<sup>7</sup> I detest a man not wise on his own behalf.
(μισῶ σοφιστὴν, δαῖς οὐδ' αὐτῷ σοφός.)

EURIPIDES, Fragments. Frag. 72. (c. 400 B.C.)
Quoted by Alexander the Great, referring to Callisthenes. See PLUTARCH, Lives: Alexander. Ch. 53, sec. 2. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vi, 20, with the Latin, "Ne quicquam sapit, qui sibi non sapit" (No one is wise who is not wise for himself), The proverbial form, and included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 18.

He who is not wise for himself is not wise in anything. (Qui ipse sibi sapiens prodesse non quit, nequidquam sapit.)

ENNIUS, Medea. (c. 175 B.C.) As quoted by CICERO, Ad Familiares, vii, 6. In De Officiis, iii, 15, Cicero also quotes Ennius, "Nequicquam sapere sapientem, qui ipse sibi prodesse non quiret" (The wise man is wise in vain who cannot be wise to his own advantage). Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 24, with the French, "Vaine est la sagesse, si elle n'est pas utile au sage."

Their wisdom is nothing worth which are not wise for them selves.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 163. (1576)
We can never be wise but by our own wisdom. (Sages ne pouvons nous estre que de nostre propre sagesse.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 24. (1580) And in the next line, he quotes the saying of Euripides given above, which Florio translates:

That wise man I cannot abide,
That for himself cannot provide.
You know the old proverb, "He is not wise that is not wise for himself."

ROBERT GREENE, Mamillia. Act ii, sc. 2. (1594)
That wise man is little worth, who is not wise in his own business.

WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Phraseologia Generalis, p. 291. (1681)

The man is not to be esteemed wise who is not wise or prudent in the management of his own concerns.

ROBERT BLAND, Proverbs. Vol. i, p. 136. (1804)

<sup>8</sup> It is easier to be wise for others than for one's self. (Il est plus aisé d'être sage pour les autres que de l'être pour soi-même.)

They talk like philosophers and live like fools.

IV—Wisdom After the Event

AESOP, Fables: The Blackbird. (c. 570 B. C.)

A bat, finding a blackbird tied with a thread in a window, asked why it sang by night but never by day. The blackbird answered that once, when singing by day, it had been captured, and had resolved never to sing by day again.

After the damage, who isn't wise? (Post iacturam quis non sapit?)

MANTUANO, Eclogues, ii, 91. (c. 1500) The Spaniards say, "Despues del daño cada uno es sabio" (When the damage is done everyone is wise); the Germans, "Nachher ist jeder klug" (Everyone is wise afterwards).

ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iii, 99. (1523)

<sup>4</sup> Men who are wise are wise in time.

W. H. DIXON, Royal Windsor. Vol. ii, ch. 19. (1879)

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, at Lincoln, Neb., 14 June, 1917.

<sup>5</sup> Not after, but before the event must a man be wise. (οὐ μετανοεῖν, ἀλλὰ προνοεῖν χρὴ τὸν ἀνδρα τὸν σοφόν.)

It things were to be done twice, all would be wise.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 702.

(1640) RAY, English Proverbs, p. 27. (1670)

<sup>8</sup> Stand not forth to face me, ere yet some evil befal thee; after it is wrought, even a fool getteth understanding. (πρὶν τι κακὸν παθεῖν βέλχθην δέ τε νήπιος ἔγνω.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xvii, l. 32. (c. 850 B. C.) Repeated in bk. xx, l. 198.

The event is the schoolmaster of fools. (Eventus, stultorum iste magister est.)

LIVY, History. Bk. xxii, sec. 39. (c. 10 B. C.) Another Latin proverbial form is, "Malo accepto, stultus sapit" (The fool grows wise after the event has come upon him).

A thyng doone, the fole knoweth. (Factum stultus cognoscit.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. i, No. 30. (1523)

As translated by TAVERNER, fo. 3. (1550)

Erasmus traces the sentiment back to Homer and Euripides, and speaks of it as a celebrated Greek axiom. Taverner adds: "But a wyse man forsee the thynges afore they come to passe."

NAEVIUS, Equo Troiano. (c. 175 B. C.) Quoted by CICERO, Ad Familiares, vii, 16. The play has been attributed also to Livius.

He who begins to flatter when he feels the smart, is wise too late. (Qui cum dolet blanditur post tempus sapit.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 558. (c. 43 B. C.)

The Trojans are wise too late (Sero sapient Phryges.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 28. See under TROY. The Phrygians, immigrants from the Balkans, akin to the Achaeans, are supposed to have been in possession of Troy at the time of the legendary Trojan War.

<sup>10</sup> To protect the booty when it is too late. (Post tempus praedae praesidium parem.)

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 294. (c. 200 B. C.)

After the rabbit has escaped, comes counsel.
(Despues de ido el conejo, viene el consejo.)

CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbs, p. 238. (1856)

When the mischief is done, the door is shut.
(Quandoquidem accepto claudenda est ianua damno.)

HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 353. (1869)

When the money is stolen, there remains but the watchdog to beat.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 369. (1938)

A Chinese proverb.

WIT

<sup>4</sup> Wit is cultured insolence. (ἡ γὰρ εὐτραπεία παιδαυμένη ὕβρις ἐστίν.)

ARISTOTLE, Rhetoric. Bk. ii, ch. 12, sec. 16. (c.
330 B. C.)

Wit's an unruly engine, wildly striking
Sometimes a friend, sometimes the engineer.
HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 41. (1633)
Wit is not only the luck of labour, but also the dexterity of thought.

WILLIAM DAVENANT, Gondibert: Preface. (1650)
The definition of Wit . . . is only this: That it is a propriety of Thoughts and Words; or in other terms, Thought and Words, elegantly adapted to the subject.

JOHN DRYDEN, The State of Innocence: Apology. (1677)

Wit lying most in the assemblage of Ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety wherein can be found any resemblance or con-gruity.

JOHN LOCKE, *An Essay Concerning Human
Understanding*. Bk. ii, ch. 11, sec. 2. (1690)
Wit, which is just a mixture of Reason and Extravagance.

JOHN DENNIS, Miscellanies: Preface. (1693)
True wit, I believe, may be defined as a justness of thought, and a facility of expression, or (in the midwives' phrase) a perfect conception and an easy delivery.

POPE, Letter to Wycherley, 26 Dec., 1704.

True Wit is Nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well ex-press'd.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 97. (1709)
What is wit? Reason expressed artificially.

M. J. DE CHÉNIER, Épître à Voltaire. (1806)
Wit consists in knowing the resemblance of things which differ, and the difference of things which are alike. (L'esprit consiste à connaître la res-semblance des choses diverses et la différence des choses semblables.)

MONTESQUIEU, Epigram. (1721) As quoted by MADAME DE STAËL, De L'Allemagne. Pt. iii, ch. 8.

Wit is the clash and reconciliation of incongrui-ties, the meeting of extremes round a corner

LEIGH HUNT, Table-Talk. (1851)
Wit is not worldly wisdom.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp. Ch. 7. (1863)
Wit, at its best, consists in the terse intrusion into an atmosphere of serene mental habit of some uncompromising truth.

PHILANDER JOHNSON, Colyumnists' Confessional.
See Everybody's Magazine, May, 1920.

There is nothing breaks so many friendships as a difference of opinion as to what constitutes wit.
ELBERT HUBBARD, Epigrams. (1911)

<sup>5</sup> Thou semyste . . . to have no more wytt than a coote.

JOHN BALE, Kynge Johan. Act i, l. 176. (c. 1550)
Thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus, ii, 1, 48. (1601)
He hath no more wit in his head than thou in both thy shoulders.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 217. (1670)
He has more wit in his little finger than you have in your whole body.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 173. (1721)
He has not all the wit in the world.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii. (1738)

<sup>6</sup> An ounce of wit is worth a pound of sorrow
RICHARD BAXTER, Of Self-Denial. (c. 1680)
An ounce of mother-wit is worth a pound of clergy [learning].

B. E., A New Dictionary of the Canting Crew,
sig. C7. (1690) ADDISON, Spectator. No. 464
An Ounce of Wit that's bought

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6495. (1732)
FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1745.
The Germans say, "Eine Unze Mutterwiss ist besser als ein Pfund Schulwiss" (An ounce of mother-wit is better than a pound of school-wit).

<sup>7</sup> Wit without an employment is a disease.
Aerugo animi, rubigo ingenii: the rust of the soul.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy.
Pt. i, sec. ii, mem. 2, subs. 6. (1621)

<sup>8</sup> Don't put too fine a point on your wit, for fear it should get blunted.

CERVANTES, Exemplary Novels: Little Gypsy
(c. 1610)

It is with wits as with razors, which are never so apt to cut those they are employed on as when they have lost their edge.

SWIFT, A Tale of a Tub: Preface. (1704)
As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set:
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. ii, l. 119. (1728)

1 I have right now of thee
A good conceyt in my wit, as I gesse.

CHAUCER (?), Troilus and Criseyde. Bk. i, l. 995. (c. 1380)

My tale is doon: for my wit is thinne.

CHAUCER, Marchantes Tale, l. 438. (c. 1388)

Whan a man hath over-greet a wit,
Ful ofte him happeth to misusen it.

CHAUCER, Canon Yeoman's Prologue, l. 95.

Such a one hath a good wit, if a wise man had the keeping it.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains (1870), p. 331. (1605)

2 If you have wit, use it to please, and not to hurt.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 5 Sept., 1748

If God gives you wit . . . wear it like your sword in the scabbard, and do not brandish it to the terror of the whole company.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 July, 1752.
Wit is so shining a quality that everybody admires it; most people aim at it, all people fear it, and few love it except in themselves.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 July, 1752.

Use your wit as a buckler, not a sword.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 549. (1855)

3 After wit is not the best.

COLLIER, ed., Roxburghe Ballads, p. 88. (c. 1605)
After-wit comes over late.

GEORGE MERITON, York-shire Ale, p. 83. (1683)
After-wit comes too late when the mischief is done.

L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop, p. 144. (1692)

After wit is commonly dear bought.

DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 6. (1709) There are two other variants, "After-wit is everybody's wit," and "After-wit is fool's wit."

See also WISDOM AFTER THE EVENT.

4 Wit to persuade and beauty to delight.

SIR JOHN DAVIES, Orchestra. St. 5. (1596)

As a wit, if not first, in the very first line.

5 Staircase wit. (L'esprit de l'escalier.)

DENIS DIDEROT, Paradox Sur le Comédien. (c. 1770) PIERRE NICOLE, The King's English, p. 32, note, attributes the phrase to M. de Tréville. To think of a retort on the stairs, when it is too late.

I never have any wit until I am below stairs. (Je n'ai jamais d'esprit qu'au bas de l'escalier.)

LA BRUYÈRE. As quoted by J.-J. Rousseau.

6 He shows all his wit at once.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca Scholastica Instructissima, p. 70. (1633)

7 Of all wit's uses the main one
Is to live well with who has none.

R. W. EMERSON, Life. (1867)

Say, was it never heard
That wisdom might in youth be gotten,
Or wit be ripe before 'twas rotten?

R. W. EMERSON, Fame.

8 He has wit at will, that with angrie heart can hold him still.

III—Wits

4 Our wits were in our skins. (ὁ νοῦς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἦν τότ' ἐν τοῖς σκύτεσιν.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Peace, I. 669. (421 B.C.)
Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ii, 18, who gives the Latin, "Mens est in tergoribus," in both Greek and Latin a play upon words, for "tergum" may mean either a shield, which was made from skins, or the skin of the back—in other words in flight.

Where are thy wits? (πού ποτ' εἰ φρενῶν;)
SOPHOCLES, Electra, I. 390. (c. 409 B.C.)

5 What silly people wits are! (Que les gens d'esprit sont bêtes.)

BEAUMARCHAIS, Le Barbier de Séville. Act i, sc. 1. (1775)

Great wits and valours, like great states,
Do sometimes sink with their own weights.

BUTLER, Hudibras, ii, i, 269. (1664)

6 I ne holde not my wittes dulle.

CHAUCEUR (?), Romaunt of The Rose, I. 6848. (c. 1365)

7 Good Wits, you know, have bad memories.

DRYDEN, Sir Martin Mar-All. Act iv, sc. 1. (1668)
A common-place book is what a provident poet cannot subsist without, for this proverbial reason, that "great wits have short memories."

SWIFT, Works (1883), ix, 191. (1720)

George: Do you remember what you read, Miss?
Maria: Not so well as I could wish. Wits have short memories.

Say'st thou so my girl! good wits jump. I had the same thought with thee.

SHADWELL, Squire of Alsatia. Act iii, sc. 4. (1688)

Good wits jump—I resolve to marry too.

SUSANNA CENTLIVRE, The Man's Bewitch'd. Act iv, sc. 2. (1710)

Great wits jump, says the poet, and hit his head against the post.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1735.

Miss: I had that at my tongue's end.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i. (1738)

Ah, where thy legs, that witty pair!

For "great wits jump"—and so did they.

THOMAS HOOD, To Grimaldi. (a. 1844) The French say, "Les beaux esprits se rencontrent" (Great wits come together), and also, "Du choc des esprits jaillissent les étincelles" (When wits meet, the sparks fly).

1 Hackyng and hemmyng as though our wittes and our senses were a woll gathering.

THOMAS WILSON, The Arte of Rhetorique, ii, 59. (1553) The original meaning of "wool-gathering" was the gathering of fragments of wool torn from a sheep by bushes and briars. This is the earliest recorded use of the phrase in its metaphorical sense of absent-mindedness.

My witts were not al this while wol-gathering.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 415. (1580)

For their wits, if they loose not their own fleeces, let them gather Wool where they can.

NICHOLAS BRETON, A Poste with a Packet of Mad Letters, ii, 83. (1603)

But my thoughts ran a wool-gathering; and I did like the countryman, who looked for his ass while he was mounted on his back. (Porque en Dios y en mi ánimo que las tengo puestas, y he caído en el descuido del que yendo sobre el asno, le buscaba.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 57. (1605)

Have you summoned your wits from wool-gathering?

THOMAS MIDDLETON, The Familie of Love. Act v, sc. 3. (1608)

Th. Aquinas, supping with king Lewis of France, upon a sudden knocked his fist upon the table, and cryed, conclusum est contra Manichaeos; his wits were a wool-gathering (as they say), and his head busied about other matters.

<sup>5</sup>
The friendship of a wolf. (λύκων φιλία.)

AESOP, Fables: The Shepherd and the Wolf.
(c. 570 B.C.) The shepherd entrusted his flock to a wolf that had gained his confidence, and the wolf fell upon the sheep and destroyed them. "Fool that I was," lamented the shepherd, "to trust the friendship of a wolf!" Similarly in the fable of The Wolf and the Goat, the wolf seeing the goat feeding upon a precipitous place which the wolf could not reach, besought the goat to descend lest she fall and be killed. "You care nothing for me," the goat replied, "you are only seeking food for yourself." Hence the proverb, λύκος καλεῖ τὰς αἴγας (The wolf calls the goat), expressing the same thought as "wolf friendship." The wolf was prominent from the earliest times in Greek proverbs and fables, always as a terrible and treacherous beast. Aesop devotes thirty-seven fables to the wolf as the chief actor.

They entrusted the keys of the pigeon-house to the cat.

<sup>6</sup>
Thou hast taken thy head safe out of the mouth of a wolf. (ἐκ λύκου στόματος ἐξήρες AESOP, Fables: The Wolf and the Crane. (c.

570 B.C.) A bone had fixed itself in the throat of a wolf, and a crane reached in and pulled it out, but when the crane asked for a reward, the wolf said that she had reward enough in getting her head safe out of a wolf's mouth. The Greek proverb is ἐκ λύκου στόματος, the equivalent of "Snatched from the jaws of death." Cited by ZENOBIUS,
Adagia, iii, 48. (c. A. D. 130)

I've got a wolf by the ears; I can neither hold it nor let it go. (τῶν ὥτων ἔχω τὸν λύκον, οὐτ' ἔχειν οὐτ' ἀφείναι δύναμαι.)

APOLLODORUS (?), The Claimant. (c. 320 B.C.)
It was from this play that Terence adapted his Phormio, and he gives the Latin of the proverb in l. 506, "Id aiunt, auribus teneo lupum; nam neque quo pacto a me amittam neque uti retineam scio." Cited by DONATUS,
Ars Grammatica (c. A. D. 350), and by ERAS-MUS, Adagia, i, v, 25, who gives the Latin proverbial form, "Auribus lupum teneo, nec-que retinere, necque amittere possum." The saying has the same significance as "having a bear by the tail." Since a wolf's ears are short, like a bear's tail, it is almost impossible to hold them.

The wolf, they say, cannot be held by the ears;
but one must lead a people or a State chiefly by the ears. (τὸν μὲν οὖν λύκον οὐ φασὶ τῶν ὥτων κρατεῖν.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia. Sec. 802D. (A. D. 97)

The cause of his [Tiberius'] hesitation was fear of the dangers which threatened him on every hand, and often led him to say that he was hold-

To see a wolf. (λύκον ἰδεῖν.)

PLATO, The Republic. Bk. i, sec. 336D. (c. 411 B.C.) i. e. to be struck dumb. Plato adds, "If I had not looked at him before he did at me, I should have lost my voice."

Have you seen the wolf? (λύκον εἶδες;)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. Idyl xiv, l. 22. (c. 270 B.C.) According to the old superstition, anyone who met a wolf and whom the wolf saw first became speechless, so, proverbially, when anyone fell suddenly silent or failed to answer a question, he was asked if he had seen a wolf. "Has the cat stolen your tongue?" is the modern equivalent.

Even voice now fails Moeris; wolves have seen Moeris first. (Vox quoque Moerim | iam fugit ipsa; lupi Moerim videre priores.)

VERGIL, Eclogues. Ecl. ix, l. 53. (37 B.C.)

"What are you mute?" I said—a waggish guest.
"Perhaps she's seen a wolf," rejoind'd in jest.

FAWKES, tr., Theocritus, xiv, 30. (1767)

It was anciently believed that the wolf, by some occult power, struck those whom it looked on dumb. The adage, as it is now used, is supposed to have taken its rise from a story in Theocritus, who relates that a lover was suddenly struck dumb, in the midst of his courtship, by the appearance of a rival named Lycus, which in the Greek language is the name of a wolf.

ROBERT BLAND, Proverbs. Vol. i, p. 174. (1814)

The French have the same proverb. They say, "Il a vu le loup," when anyone suddenly falls silent.

Our young companion has seen a wolf, . . . and he has lost his tongue in consequence.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Clarissa, iv, 119 (1748)

Napoleon's power is far too great to be shaken. This being so I have tried to serve him, for it is well to howl when you are among wolves.

CONAN DOYLE, Uncle Bernac. Ch. 1. (1897)
One must howl with the wolves; . . . when a general cry is raised against any, it is safest to join it. . . . In the whole circle of proverbs there is scarcely a baser or more cowardly than this.

R. C. TRENCH, On the Lessons in Proverbs. Ch. 5. (1853) It will be noted that there are two forms to this proverb, this one, which the French also have, "Il faut hurler avec les loups," and the other which says that he who lives with wolves will learn to howl as they do, that is, that one is influenced by the company one keeps. See also under COMPANY.
"Live like wolves," says the Spanish proverb, "and you will learn to howl."

SAMUEL SMILES, Character, p. 66. (1871) The Italians have the same form, "Chi vive tra lupi, impara a urlare."

<sup>1</sup>
One always proclaims the wolf bigger than he is. (On crie toujours le loup plus grand qu'il n'est.)

UNKNOWN, Proverbes Communs. (c. 1450) See DE LINCY, Proverbes Français, i, 182. The Germans say, "Geschrei macht den Wolf grösser als er ist" (Rumor makes the wolf bigger than he is).

II—The Wolf in Sheep's Clothing

<sup>2</sup>
Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

New Testament: Matthew, vii, 15. (c. A. D. 65)
See under PROPHET. The Greek proverb is, ἕξ ἀπρί, καὶ μέσα λύκος (Externally a sheep, inwardly a wolf); the Latin, "Pelle sub agnina latitat mens saepe lupina" (Under the skin of a lamb the mind of a wolf often lies hidden).

Who-so toke a wethers skin,
And wrapped a gredy wolf therin,
For he shulde go with lambes whyte,
Wenest thou not he wolde hem byte?
(Qui de la toison dam Belin,
En leu de mantel sebelin,

These two had . . . vnder their sheepes skinnnes, hidden the bloudie nature of a wolfe.

ROBERT GREENE, Works (Grosart), iii, 11. (1584)

Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclined as is the ravenous wolf.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI, iii, 1, 77. (1590)

Thou wolf in sheep's array.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI, i, 3, 55. (1591)

He is a wolf in a lamb's skin.

DAVID FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 54. (c. 1595) Referring to a hypocrite.

The hypocrite is the wolf clad in the sheep's skin.

WILLIAM GURNALL, The Christian in Compleat Armour. Pt. ii, ch. 27. (1657)

There is the meekness of the clergyman. There spoke the wolf in sheep's clothing.

HENRY FIELDING, Amelia. Bk. ix, ch. 9. (1751)
Scripture don't warn us agin wolves, except when they have sheep's-clothin' on.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Wise Saws. Ch. 27. (1843)
[His] bosom friend is a Jesuit, a fierce wolf in sheep's clothing.

R. D. BLACKMORE, Cripps. Ch. 44. (1876)

CLARE BOOTHE, Kiss the Boys Good-bye. Act ii, sc. 1. (1939) Referring to a predatory college-man.

He is no longer the wolf. No, he has put on the sheep's clothing.

Captious, yet gracious, sweet and bitter too, I cannot with thee live, nor yet without thee.

(Difficilis facilis, lucundus acerbus es idem: nec tecum possum vivere nec sine te.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. xii, ep. 47 (c. A. D. 103)

Women are the baggage of life: they are Troublesome, and hinder us in the great march, And yet we cannot be without 'em.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, Brennoralt. Act i. (1639)

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow, Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasant fellow, Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,

There is no living with thee, nor without thee.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 68. (1711)

A free translation of Martial.

As for the women, though we scorn and flout 'em,

We may live with, but cannot live without 'em.

FREDERIC REYNOLDS, The Will. Act i, sc. 1. (1797)

A man's got to have a woman. They're botherations—but they sort of pretty up a man's life.

J. W. BELLAH, Bones of Napoleon, p. 180. (1940)

A woman spins even when she talks.

Babylonian Talmud: Megillah, fo. 14b. (c. 450)

A woman schemes even amid idle chatter.

The proverb is quoted as a comment on the conversation between David and Abigail, I Samuel, xxv. It is reinforced by another to similar effect on the same page: "The goose bends its head while walking, but its eyes rove about."

Deceite, weeping, spinning god hath yive

To women kindly, why! they may live.

CHAUCER, The Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 401

(c. 1388) From the medieval Latin jingle, "Fallere, flere, nere, dedit Deus in muliere."

Women, of kinde, have condicions three;

The first is, that they be fulle of deceit;

To spinne also it is hir propertee;

And women have a wonderful conceit,

They wepen oft, and al is but a sleight.

JOHN LYDGATE, Of Deceitful Women, l. 29. (c. 1430)

4

A woman of sixty, the same as a girl of six, runs to the sound of the timbrel.

Babylonian Talmud: Mo'ed Katan, fo. 9b. (c. 450)

As she slumbers, the basket falls.

Babylonian Talmud: Sanhedrin, fo. 7a. A comment upon woman's laziness.

What does Schwilnai want among the bulrushes?

Babylonian Talmud: Sanhedrin, fo. 82b.

Schwilnai, a woman proverbial for immorality.

A daughter of princes, she became a harlot for barge-men.

Babylonian Talmud: Sanhedrin, fo. 106a. There is no depth of depravity to which even a high-born woman may not sink.

Women are light-minded.

Babylonian Talmud: Shabbath, fo. 33b.

5

But that my eyes

BLAZE DE BURY, tr., Faust. Pt. ii, sc. 5. (1847)

It is from de Bury's rendering of Goethe's line that the phrase, "The eternal feminine" derives. Bayard Taylor, in his translation of Faust, rendered the line more literally but much less strikingly, "The Woman-Soul leadeth us Upward and on."

The Eternal Feminine draws us ever upward and on.

BERNARD SHAW, Man and Superman. Act iii. (1903) Quoting Goethe.

"Das Ewig-Weibliche zieht uns hinan." In English, "The Eternal Feminine" sounded crude, and smacked of coyness, of frivolous allure. His vision was not the eternal feminine. Nor was that Goethe's thought. . . . The words he sought suddenly came to him. "Only the Woman of man's desire can lift him heavenward."

The generality of women appear to me as children whom I would rather give a sugar plum than my time.

JOHN KEATS, Letter to Georgiana Keats, 21 Oct., 1818.

Women are to be talked to as below men, and above children.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 19 Dec., 1749.

Women are much more like each other than men: they have, in truth, but two passions, vanity and love. . . . He who flatters them most, pleases them best.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 19 Dec., 1749.

What attracts us in a woman rarely binds us to her.

CHURTON COLLINS, Aphorisms. No. 101. (c. 1905) The French say, "Ce ne sont pas les plus belles qui font les grandes passions" (It is not the most beautiful who inspire the great loves), or "It is not the most beautiful women whom men love most."

I have never yet seen a man as fond of virtue as of women. (Oong mee kin hou tuk gnee hou suk chea.)

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xv, ch. 12. Said when he saw Duke Ling riding out with his wanton wife, Nan-Tzū. The saying is repeated in Bk. ix, ch. 17, and was often used by Confucius in ending his discourses. The concluding word is sometimes translated "beauty" or "sensual beauty."

A nut tree, an ass, and a woman are bound together by the same law: None of the three will do well if the beatings cease. (Nux, asinus, mulier, simili sunt lege legati: | Haec tris nil recta faciunt, si verbera cessent.)

COGNATUS, Adagia. (c. 1560) As cited by GRONAEUS, Adagia, p. 484/1. There are several variants, one of four lines attributed to Zevocotius by NICOLAS MERCIER, De Conscribendo Epigrammata, p. 166 (c. 1650): "Nux, asinus, campana, piger, si verbera cessent, | Hic cubat, illa silet, hic stat, et illa manet. | Nux, asinus, campana, piger, si verbera cogat, | Hic studet, illa sonat, hic it, et illa cadit" (A nut, an ass, a bell, and a sluggard, if the blows cease, the one is idle, the other silent, the one stands fast, and the other stops, while if blows are applied, the sluggard is busy, the bell sounds, the ass goes, and the nut falls). The proverbial Latin form, as given by HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 297, is "Nux, asinus, mulier verberare opus habent" (A nut, an ass, and a woman need the whip). Henderson, adds, "If you beat spice, it will smell the sweeter."

A woman, an ass, and a walnut tree, Bring the more fruit, the more beaten they be.
STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. iii, p. 39. (1574) Pettie, tr. Quoted as a proverb. The Spanish form substitutes almond for walnut.

It is sayde that an asse, a walnut-tree, and a woman asketh much beating before they be good.

Woman: what better or truer term could I use than "woman"? (Mulierem: quid potius dicam aut verius quam mulierem?)

ENNIUS. Frag. 417, Loeb (c. 180 B.C.)

No woman gives us the radiant dream that lurks beneath the word Woman.

ÉMILE HENNEQUIN, Pastels in Prose, p. 203.

Woman, God bless her by that name, for it is a far nobler name than lady.

WALTER VON DER VOGELWEIDE, Woman and Lady. As quoted by WALSH, Golden Treasury of Medieval Literature, p. 109.

The ladies here [in America] have an extreme aversion to being called women. . . . Their idea is that the term designates only the lower or less refined class of female humankind.

FRANCES KEMBLE, Journal, i, 311. (1832)

A female negro is called a "wench," or a "woman"; and it is this, perhaps, which makes the term "woman" so offensive to American ears, when applied to white females, who must all be called "ladies."

J. S. BUCKINGHAM, The Slave States of America, ii, 29. (1842)

O Woman! in our hours of ease
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please, . . .
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou!

SCOTT, Marmion. Canto vi, st. 30. (1808)

'Twas ever thus, when in life's storm

Hope's star to man grows dim,

An angel kneels, in woman's form,

And breathes a prayer for him.

GEORGE POPE MORRIS, Pocahontas. (1838)

The soul's armour is never well set to the heart unless a woman's hand has braced it.

JOHN RUSKIN, Sesame and Lilies: Of Queen's Gardens. (1865)

<sup>6</sup> O woman! lovely woman! Nature made thee

THOMAS OTWAY, Venice Preserv'd. Act i, sc. 1. (1682)

I saw her upon nearer view,

A Spirit, yet a Woman too! . . .

A Creature not too high or good

For human nature's daily food. . . .

A perfect Woman, nobly planned,

To warn, to comfort, and command;

And yet a Spirit still, and bright

With something of angelic light.

III—Woman: A Curse

<sup>8</sup> O God, what a breed thou hast given us in womankind! (ὦ Ζεῦ. γυναικῶν οἶον ὄψας γένος.)

AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes, l. 256. (467 B. C.)

A woman's nature, lust and opportunity. (Muliebree ingenium, prolubium, occasio.)

ACCIIUS, Andromeda. Frag. 78, Loeb. (c. 140 B. C.)
No woman has solid worth for long. (Nulla diu femina pondus habet.)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. ii, eleg. 25, l. 22. (c. 24 B. C.) The Germans say, "Frau und Mond leuchten mit fremden Licht" (Woman, like the moon, shines with borrowed light).

<sup>1</sup>
No wild beast is as savage as a woman in her ire;

She is wilder than a leopard, she is fiercer than a fire.

(οὐδὲν ἔστι θηρίον γυναικὸς ἀμαχώτερον, οὐδὲ πῦρ, οὐδ' ὧδ' ἀναιδὴς οὐδεμία πόρδαλις.)

ARISTOPHANES, Lysistrata, l. 1014. (412 B. C.)
What an enraged woman can accomplish! (Furens quid femina possit.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. v, l. 6. (19 B. C.)

When danger comes in a right and honorable way, a woman's heart grows chill with fear; . . . but if she is doing a bold, bad thing, her courage fails not. For a husband to order his wife on board ship is cruelty; . . . but if she is running away with a lover, she feels no qualms: then she vomits over her husband; now . . . she roams about the decks, and delights in hauling at the hard ropes. (Iusta pericli | si ratio est et honesta, timent pavidoque gelantur pectore | fortem animum praestant rebus quas turpiter audent.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 94. (C. A. D. 120)

A woman dares all things when she either loves or hates. (Audax est ad omnia, quae amat vel odit.)

St. JEROME (?), Epistle of Valerius to Rufinus (1742). Vol. ii, col. 245. Migne, Patr. Lat., xxx, col. 259. (C. A. D. 380) Probably spurious.

What will not woman, gentle woman, dare
When strong affection stirs her spirit up?

SOUTHEY, Madoc. Pt. ii, canto ii, l. 125. (1805)

When greater perils men environ,
Then women show a front of iron.

THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH, Betty Zane. (1880)

<sup>2</sup>
There is but one thing in the world that's worse

Than a shameless woman—that's another woman.

(ἀλλ' οὐ γὰρ ἔστι τῶν ἀναισχύντων φύσει γυναικῶν οὐδὲν κάκιον εἰς ἅπαντα πλὴν ἂρ' εἰ γυναῖκες.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Thesmophoriazusa, l. 531 (410 B. C.)

Walk behind a lion rather than behind a woman
Babylonian Talmud: Berachoth, fo. 61a

Woman, wakeful woman's never weary,
Above all, when she waits to thump her deary
R. H. BARHAM, The Ghost. (a. 1845)

<sup>3</sup>
Woman is the chain by which man is attached to the chariot of folly.

BHARTRIHARI, The Srīnga Sataka. (c. 625)

Nothing enchants the soul so much as young women. They alone are the cause of evil, and there is no other.

BHARTRIHARI, The Srīnga Sataka

A woman insults a man's soul like no other thing in the world.

CLIFFORD ODETS, Awake and Sing. Act i. (1935)

<sup>4</sup>
Give me any plague, but the plague of the heart: and any wickedness, but the wickedness of a woman. . . . All wickedness is but little to the wickedness of a woman. (Omnis plaga tristitia cordis est: et omnis malitia, nequitia mulieris. . . . Brevis omnis malitia super malitiam mulieris.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxv, 13, 19. (c. 190 B. C.)

From a garment cometh forth a moth, and from a woman a woman's wickedness. (ἀπὸ γὰρ ἱματίων ἐκπορεύεται σὴς, καὶ ἀπὸ γυναικὸς πονηρία γυναικός.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom, xlii, 13. The Vulgate is, "De vestimentis enim procedit tinea, et a muliere iniquitas viri."

The leader of all wickedness is woman. (Dux malorum femina.)

SENECA, Hippolytus, l. 559. (C. A. D. 60)

Alle women been wikke. . . . "Of a thousand men," seith Salomon, "I found a good man; but certes, of alle women, good womman found I never."

CHAUCER, The Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 14. (c. 1387)

A woman can do more than the devil.

WILLIAM BERCHER, The Nobility of Women, p. 140. (1559) Cited as "a common proverb."

Woman is the very root of wickedness, the cause of the bitterest pain, a mine of suffering.

TULSI DĀS, Rāmāyan. (1574)

A wicked woman and an evil is three halfpence worse than the devil.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 118. (1639)
Weal and women cannot pan, But woe and women can.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 365. (1678)
Women and weal can never agree.

CARR, The Dialect of Craven, ii, 29. (1828)

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, vii, 26. (c. 250 B. C.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. ii, cent. ii, No. 48. (1523) An old Greek proverb, of which Erasmus gives the Latin, "Ignis, mare, mulier, tria mala," calling it the "proverbial trimeter." Included by TAVERNER, Translations from Erasmus, fo. 31, with the comment, "What thyng is more dangerous then fyre? What more perilous then the sea? and what more comberous then a shrewed wyfe?"

An angry sea makes a great uproar, and fire a bitter assault, but neither the fury of the one nor the bitterness of the other is as bad as a woman.

PLAUTES, Anthology. (c. 1400) Paraphrasing Euripides.

Fire, water, woman, are man's ruin,
Says wise Professor Vander Bruin.
By flames, a house I hired was lost

• Last year, and I must pay the cost.
Next year the sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd.
A slave I am to Clara's eyes,
The gipsy knows her power and flies.
Fire, water, woman, are my ruin,
And great thy wisdom, Vander Bruin.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Fire, Water, Woman. (1709)

<sup>4</sup> Strange that God hath given to men
Cures for the venom of all creeping snakes.

• But no man ever yet devised a cure
For woman's venom, worse than fire or viper:
So terrible a curse are we to men.

<sup>5</sup> Lo now, how treacherous is womankind!
(ὁρᾶτ', ἀπιστον ὡς γυναικείον γένος.)

EURIPIDES, Iphigenia in Taurica, l. 1298. (c. 414 B. C.)

What we are we are, we women, worse I will not say. (ἀλλ' ἐσμὲν ὁλόν ἐσμεν, οὐκ ἐρῶ κακόν, | γυναῖκες.)

EURIPIDES, Medea, l. 889. (c. 431 B. C.)

Than Euripides there never was a wiser poet:
How well he says that woman is the most shameless of animals!

(οὐκ ἔστ' ἀνὴρ Εὐριπίδου σοφώτερος ποιητής· οὐδὲν γὰρ ὡδὶ θρέμῃ ἀναιδὲς ἔστιν ὡς γυναῖκες.)

ARISTOPHANES, Lysistrata, l. 368. (412 B. C.)

The exact words are not found in the extant plays of Euripides, but the sentiment is thoroughly his.

<sup>6</sup> We women, little apt for virtuous deeds,
Are of dark deeds most cunning fashioners.

(γυναῖκες, εἰς μὲν ἔσθλ' ἀμχανώταται, κακῶν δὲ πάντων τέκτονες σοφώταται.)

EURIPIDES, Medea, l. 408. (c. 431 B. C.)

For a woman, to do wrong is much easier than to

IV—Women Good and Bad

<sup>3</sup>Women, wealth, and wine have each two qualities, a good and a bad.

NATHAN BAILEY, Dictionary: Women. (1736)
Oh the gladness of her gladness when she's glad,
And the sadness of her sadness when she's sad.

But the gladness of her gladness,
And the sadness of her sadness
Are as nothing, Charles,
To the badness of her badness when she's bad
J. M. BARRIE, Rosalind. (1915) Quoted

<sup>4</sup>For study of the good and bad in woman two women are a needless expense.

AMBROSE BIERCE, Epigram. (1911)

<sup>5</sup>From the evil woman guard yourself, and the good one never trust. (De la mala muger te guarda, y de la buena no fies nada.)

B. C.)

JOHN WEBSTER, The White Devil. Act iv. (1612)

<sup>9</sup>Wicked women bother one. Good women bore
one. That is the only difference between them.

OSCAR WILDE, Lady Windermere's Fan. Act iii
(1893)

V—Woman: Her Creation

And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man.

Old Testament: Genesis, ii, 21, 22. (c. 550 B.C.) God considered from which part of man to create woman. He said, I will not create her from his head, lest she hold up her own head too proudly; nor from his eye, lest she be too curious; nor from his ear, lest she be an eavesdropper; nor from his mouth, lest she be a chatterer; nor from his heart, lest she be too jealous; nor from his hand, lest she be too acquisitive; nor from his foot, lest she be a gadabout; but from his rib, a hidden and modest part of his body, so that she too may be modest, not fond of show, but rather of seclusion. But woman baffles God's design. She is haughty and walks with outstretched neck (Isa. iii, 16) and wanton eyes (Isa. iii, 16). She is given to eavesdropping (Gen. xviii, 10). She chatters slander (Numb., xii, 1), and is of a jealous disposition (Gen., xxx, 1). She is afflicted with kleptomania (Gen., xxxi, 19), and is fond of running about (Gen., xxiv, 1). In addition to these vices, she is gluttonous (Gen., iii, 6), lazy (Gen., xviii, 6), and bad tempered (Gen., xvi, 6).

Midrash: Genesis Rabbah, xviii, 2. (c. 550) [God] when he made the first woman, he made her nat of the heved of Adam for she sholde nat clayme to greet lordshipe. . . . Also certes, god ne made nat womman of the foot of Adam, for she ne sholde nat be holden to lowe; . . . but god made womman of the rib of Adam, for womman sholde be felawe un-to man.

CHAUCER, The Persones Tale. Sec. 79. (c. 1389) Man was not made of the woman, but the woman of the man, and was taken, not out of the head, that she shoulde beare rule over man, but out of the side, where is the seate of the heart, to the end he should love her hartily and as his owne selfe.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. iii, p. 26. (1574) Pettie, tr. Woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be loved.

MATTHEW HENRY, An Exposition of the Old and New Testament: Genesis, ii, 21, 22. (1710) Not from his head was woman took, As made her husband to o'erlook; Not from his feet, as one designed The footstool of the stronger kind; But fashioned for himself, a bride; An equal, taken from his side.

CHARLES WESLEY, Short Hymns on Select Passages of the Holy Scriptures. (1746) The woman was not taken From Adam's head, we know, To show she must not rule him— 'Tis evidently so

The woman she was taken From under Adam's arm, So she must be protected From injuries and harm.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Adam and Eve's Wedding Song. Written for Sarah Haggard on her marriage to Aaron Grigsby, 2 Aug., 1826.

"What? rise again with all one's bones," Quoth Giles, "I hope you fib:

I trusted, when I went to Heaven, To go without my rib."

S. T. COLERIDGE, Epigram. (s. 1834)

You see, dear, it is not true that woman was made from man's rib; she was really made from his funny bone.

J. M. BARRIE, What Every Woman Knows. Act iii. (1908)

Woman, ye last thing God made, and therefore ye best.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 311. (1580) Man was made when Nature was but an apprentice, but woman was made when she was a skilful mistress of her art.

EDWARD SHARPHAM, Cupid's Whirligig. (1607) O fairest of creation! last and best Of all God's works!

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ix, l. 896. (1667) Our sex, you know, was after yours designed: The last perfection of the Maker's mind.

JOHN DRYDEN, Amphitryon: Prologue. (1690) I have always said it: Nature meant woman to be her masterpiece. (Ich hab' es immer gesagt: das Weib wollte die Natur zu ihrem Meisterstück machen.)

LESSING, Emilia Galotti. Act v, sc. 7. (1772)

Auld Nature swears, the lovely dears Her noblest work she classes, O; Her prentice han' she tried on man.

An' then she made the lasses, O. BURNS, Green Grow the Rashes. (1786) Woman was the second mistake of God.

F. W. NIETZSCHE, The Antichrist. Ch. 48. (1888) The Bible says that woman was the last thing God made. Evidently He made her on Saturday night. She reveals His fatigue.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS, fils, Epigram. (c. 1865)

VI—Woman: A Woman's Counsel

3
Follow not after [the counsels of] a woman and let her not lead captive thy understanding.

ANI, Teaching How to Live. No. 58. (c. 2000 B.C.) Budge, tr.

Whoever follows a woman's advice falls into Hell Babylonian Talmud: Baba Metsia, fo. 59a. (c. 450) Deduced from the instance of Ahab, who followed the advice of Jezebel.

The advice of a clever woman will ruin a walled city.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 383. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

4
A woman's advice is not worth much, but he who won't take it is a fool. (El consejo de la mujer es poco. Y el que no le toma es loco.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 7. (1615)

A woman's advice is a poor thing, but he is a fool who does not take it.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 5. (1875)

EURIPIDES, The Suppliants, l. 294. (c. 421 B. C.)

A womans avyse helpys at the last.

Towneley Plays. No. xiii, 342. (c. 1460)

Let no man value at a little price

A virtuous woman's counsel.

CHAPMAN, Gentleman Usher. Act iv. (1606)

A womans counsell is sometimes good.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 22. (1639)

The best counsel is that of woman. (El primer consejo Ha de ser de la muger.)

CALDERON, El Médico de su Honra. Act i, sc. 2. (c. 1650)

A womans advice is best at a dead lift.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 6. (1659)

Would men but follow what the sex advise,

All things would prosper, all the world grow wise.

POPE, January and May, l. 67. (1709)

GILBERTUS NOXERANUS, Epigram. (c. 1200) See

GRYNAEUS, Adagia, p. 130. The French have the same proverb, "Prends le premier conseil d'une femme, et non le second." Cited by

TRENCH, On the Lessons in Proverbs, ch. 4.

The Italians say, "La donna savia è all' impensata, alla pensata è matta" (Women are wise offhand and fools on reflection). That is, first advice springs from intuition, in which a woman may be trusted, while (to quote Trench), "in processes of reasoning, out of which the second counsels spring, women may and will be inferior to us." See also

The philosophre seith, "in wikked conseil wommen venquisshe men."

CHAUCER, The Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 14. (1387)

In Sec. 15 Chaucer has, "In wikked conseil wommen venquisschen hir housbondes."

<sup>4</sup> Hit is said in lede [among people]

Cold red [advice] is quene [woman's] red.

UNKNOWN, Proverbs of Alfred (South), l. 139.

(a. 1250) From the medieval Icelandic proverb, "Köld eru opt Kvenna-rath" (Cold are often women's counsels). Cold: baneful, fatal.

Wommennes counsells been ful ofte colde;

Womannes counsell broghte us first to wo,

And made Adam fro paradys to go.

CHAUCER, Nonne Preestes Tale, l. 436. (c. 1387)

For women, with a mischief to their kind,

Pervert, with bad advice, our better mind.

A woman's counsel brought us first to woe,

And made her man his paradise forego.

DRYDEN, Cock and the Fox, l. 555. (a. 1700)

ALBERTANO OF BRESCIA, Liber Consolationis

(1246) Cited as a common saying.

Eek som men han seyde, that "the conseillinge of women is outhur to dere, or elles to litel of prys."

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 15. (c. 1387)

Ah! gentle dames, it gars me greet,

To think how monie counsels sweet,

How monie lengthen'd, sage advices,

The husband frae the wife despises!

VII—Woman: A Woman's No

Babylonian Talmud: Semachoth, ii, 6. (c. 450)

Of women.

They wooed her and she resisted; they left her and then she fell in love.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 229. (1817)

A little while she strove, and much repented,

And whispering "I will ne'er consent"—consented

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i. st. 117. (1818)

<sup>8</sup> Between a woman's Yes and No I would not venture to stick the point of a pin. (Entre el Sí y el No de la mujer no me atreveria yo a poner una punta de alfiler.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 19. (1615)

When a woman's lips say, "It is enough," she looks at you with her eyes and they say "Again."

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 384

(1938) Champion cites a similar Japanese proverb on p. 447, "Saying 'No' a woman shakes her head lengthwise."

<sup>9</sup> Take not the first refusal ill:

Tho' now she won't, anon she will.

THOMAS D'URFEY, A Song Set by Mr. Berenclow. (c. 1700)

Never take No for an answer.

J. F. MITCHELL. Title and refrain of a popular song. (1886)

<sup>10</sup> The swain did woo; but she was nice;

ROBERT GREENE, The Shepherd's Ode. (a. 1592)

But in wayne shee did conjure him

To depart her presence soe;

Having a thousand tongues to allure him
And but one to bid him goe:

Where lipps invite, And eyes delight,
And cheeks, as fresh as rose in June,
Persuade delay; What boots she say,
Forgoe me now, come to me soone?

UNKNOWN, Dulcina. (a. 1600) See PERCY, Reliques, ser. iii, bk. ii, No. 13. Sometimes attributed to Sir Walter Raleigh. Percy says it "is supposed to have been written by Ben Jonson."

Nineteen nay-says of a maiden is but half a grant.

5 Womans behaviour is a surer barre
Then is their no: that fairely doth deny Without denying; thereby kept they are Safe ev'n from hope; in part to blame is she,
Which hath without consent bin only tride;
He comes too neere, that comes to be de-nide.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, A Wife. St. 36. (a. 1613)
Let this great maxim be my virtue's guide:

In part she is to blame that has been try'd—
He comes too near, that comes to be deny'd.

VIII—Woman: A Woman's Reason

8 If any one presses me to say why I love him.
I feel that it could no otherwise be answered than by saying, "Because it was he; because it was I." (Si on me presse de dire pourquoi je l'aymois, je sens que cela ne se peult exprimer qu'en respondant, "Parce que c'estoit luy; parce que c'estoit moy.")

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 27. (1580)

I have no other but a woman's reason;

I think him so, because I think him so.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona,
i, 2, 22. (1594)

Women's reasons; they would not because they would not.

JOHN LYLY, Love's Metamorphosis. Act iv. sc.
1. (1601)

Besides, I have a woman's reason; I will not dance because I will not dance.

THOMAS MIDDLETON, Blurt. Act i, sc. 1. (1602)
They were, scilicet, because they were; which is more foolish than a woman's reason.

BISHOP RICHARD MONTAGU, The Acts and Monuments of the Church, p. 106. (a. 1641)

We use to say, it's a woman's reason to say, I will do such a thing, because I will do it.

JEREMIAH BURROUGHS, On Hosea. Vol. iv, p. 80. (1652)

A woman's reason—because it is so.

GEORGE FARQUHAR, The Recruiting Officer. Act iv, sc. 3. (1706)

Because is woman's reason.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 68. (1721)
To contradict you, I know, is high treason,
For the will of a wife is always her reason.

SAMUEL FOOTE, The Englishman in Paris: Prologue. (1753)

A pretty way of proving the point, being no better than the ladies' reason, it is divisible because it is.

ABRAHAM TUCKER, The Light of Nature Pursued (1834), i, 287. (1768)

This mode of arguing, if arguing it may be called, reminds me of what is vulgarly termed "a woman's reason"; for women sometimes declare that they love or believe certain things "because" they love or believe them.

MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, A Vindication of the Rights of Woman. Ch. 5. (1792)

If any one were to ask me why I dislike him I should probably have to answer like a woman: Because I do.

W. H. HUDSON, Dead Man's Plack: Preamble. (1920)

IX—Woman: Her Learning

1 A woman has no learning except in the use of the spindle.

Babylonian Talmud: Joma, fo. 66b. (c. 450)

When a woman inclines to learning there is usually something wrong with her sexual apparatus.

F. W. NIETZSCHE, Beyond Good and Evil. Ch. 4, Apothegm 144. (1886)

2 I hate a learned woman. (σοφὴν δὲ μισῶ.)

EURIPIDES, Hippolytus, l. 640. (c. 428 B.C.)

I hate a woman who is for ever consulting and poring over the "Grammar" of Palaemon. (Odi hanc ego quae repetit volvitque Palaemonis artem.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 451. (c. A. D. 120)
Men hate learned women.

TENNYSON, The Princess. Pt. ii, l. 442. (1847)
Guard yourself from the learned woman. (Guardate de muger latina.)

CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbes, p. 262. (1856)

3 When an Ass climbeth a Ladder, you may find Wisdom in Women.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5547. (1732)
But there's wisdom in women, of more than they have known.

RUPERT BROOKE, There's Wisdom in Women. (a. 1915)

4 Spell well, if you can.

LUCY HAY, COUNTESS DOWAGER OF CARLISLE, Thoughts, p. 116. (a. 1660)

It produces great praise to a lady to spell well.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to Martha Jefferson. (1783)

5 I have often heard said that One wise woman is two fools.

SIR ROGER L'ESTRANGE, tr., Erasmus' Colloquies, p. 220. (1680)

A wise woman is twice a fool.

NATHAN BAILEY, tr., Erasmus, p. 256. (1725)

It is foolish for a woman to be too wise.

ARTHUR STRINGER, The Devastator, p. 115. (1944)

MENANDER, Fragments. Frag. 702. (c. 300 B.C.)

Let all her ways be unconfin'd;

And clap your padlock—on her mind.

MATTHEW PRIOR, An English Padlock, l. 78. (c. 1700) Quoted by BICKERSTAFFE, The Padlock. Act ii, sc. 3.

7 She can't have a mind, no woman has one. (Nam cor non potest, quod nulla habet.)

PLAUTUS, Miles Gloriosus, l. 786. (c. 200 B.C.)

It is evident from the context that Plautus means "mind" and not "heart," for he is speaking of ready wit.

Wit in most women tends to exaggerate their folly rather than their good sense. (L'esprit de la plupart des femmes sert plus à fortifier leur folie que leur raison.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 340. (1665)

A very little wit is valued in a woman, as we are pleased with a few words spoken plain by a parrot.

SWIFT, Thoughts on Various Subjects. (1714)

8 A blue-stocking is the scourge of her husband. (Une femme bel-esprit est le fléau de son mari.)

ROUSSEAU, Emile. Bk. i. (1762)

X—Woman: Her Inconstancy

9 The minds of women are as changeable as the drop of dew which rests upon the lotus leaf

BHARTRIHARI, Niti Sataka. No. 111. (c. A. D. 625)

In The Sringe Sataka, Bhartihari has, "A woman talks to one man, looks at a second, and thinks of a third."

A woman's mind and winter-wind change oft.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 159. (1639)
RAY, English Proverbs, p. 50. (1670)

A woman's mind is like the wind in a winter's night.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 17. (1721)

BAILEY, Dictionary: Women. (1736)

Tho' women's minds like winter winds,

May shift and turn and a' that.

ROBERT BURNS, Women's Minds. (a. 1796)

To change the mind is a lady's privilege.

STANLEY WEYMAN, Starvecrow Farm. Ch. 22. (1905) The usual proverbial form is, "Ladies have leave to change their minds."

A woman's mind is cleaner than a man's—she changes it oftener.

OLIVER HERFORD, Epigram. (c. 1925)

1 He that hath a woman hath an eel by the tail.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, The Scornful Lady. Act ii, sc. 1. (1610)

A woman and a wet eel both have slippery tails.

JAMES SHIRLEY, Arcadia. Act v, sc. 1. (1640)

2 A Woman Is a Weather-Cocke.

NATHANIEL FIELD. Title of comedy. (1612)

Women are (aft times) weather-cocks.

THOMAS DRAKE, Bibliotheca, p. 238. (1633)

They say, a woman is a wether-cocke.

WILLIAM SAMPSON, The Vow Breaker. Act i, sc. 4. (1636)

3 Woman often changes; foolish the man who trusts her. (Souvent femme varie; Bien fol est qui s'y fie.)

FRANÇOIS I OF FRANCE. (c. 1530) Sometimes quoted, "Tout femme varie." See BRANTÔME, Œuvres, vii, 395

This proverb is often cited, with the explanation that François I, talking with his sister, Marguerite d'Angoulême, of the inconstancy of women, cut it upon the glass of one of the windows of the château of Chambord, using the diamond of his ring.

LE ROUX DE LINCY, Proverbes Français, i, 231.

Woman's a various and changeful thing.

DRYDEN, tr., Aeneid Bk. iv, l. 850. (1697)

4 She is constant only in her inconstancy. (Tantum constans in levitate sua est.)

OWID, Tristia. Bk. v, eleg. 8, l. 18. (c. A.D. 9)

Ovid is speaking of Fortune.

Women, who are constant only in unconconstancy

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 97. (1576)

What constancy is to bee hoped for in kytes of Cressid's kinde? May one gather Grapes of thornes, Sugar, of Thistals, or constancy of women?

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 231. The last sentence paraphrases Matthew, vii, 16

5 A woman often is but a feather in the wind. (Une femme souvent | N'est qu'une plume au vent.)

HUGO, Le Roi S'Amuse. Act iv, sc. 2. (1832)

Woman is variable as a feather in the wind. (La donna è mobile | Qual piuma al vento.)

F.M. PIAVE, Libretto of Verdi's Rigoletto. (1851)

SAEMUND (?), Poetic Edda: Hovamol. St. 90. (c. 900)

The trot of an Asse, the fyre of Strawe, and the loue of a woman lasteth little. (Trotto d'asino, foco di paglia, & amor di donna, poco durano.)

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 33. (1578)

Love lodged in a woman's breast Is but a guest.

HENRY WOTTON, A Woman's Heart. (c. 1639)

7 He plows the waves, and sows the sand, And seeks to gather the wind in a net, Whose hopes on the heart of woman are set (Ne l'onde solca, e ne l'arena semina, E 'l vago vento spera in rete accogliere Chi sue speranze fonda in cor di femina.)

JACOPO SANNAZARO, Arcadia: Ecloga Octava. (1504)

He waters plows, and soweth in the sand, And hopes the flick'ring wind with net to hold, Who hath his hopes laid upon woman's hand

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia. Bk. ii. (a. 1586)

Oh, female faith;

Go sow the ingrateful sand, and love a woman.

JOHN MARSTON, Malcontent. Act iv. (1604)

He ploughs in sand, and sows against the wind, That hopes for constant love of woman kind

FULLER, Medicina Gymnastica. (a. 1661)

8 I write the oaths of women on water. (ὄρκους ἐγὼ γυναικῶς εἰς ὕδωρ γράφω.)

SOPHOCLES. Frag. 694. (c. 450 B.C.)

She kept her word like a woman. (Muliebri fecit fide.)

PLAUTUS, Miles Gloriosus, l. 456. (c. 200 B.C.)

What a woman says to her lover should be written in wind or running water. (Sed mulier cupido quod dicit amanti | in vento et rapida scribere oportet aqua.)

CATULLUS, Odes. Ode lxx, l. 4. (c. 57 B.C.)

The words of women, lighter than falling leaves. (Verba puellarum, foliis leviora caducis.)

OWID, Amores Bk. ii, eleg. 16, l. 45. (c. 13 B.C.)

The Germans say, "Mädchenschwüre sind wie leere Spreu" (Women's oaths are like empty husks).

SAEMUND (?), Poetic Edda: Hovamol. St. 84. (c. 900)

A woman's oaths are wafers, break with making.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Chances. Act ii, sc. 1. (1620)

This record will for ever stand.

"Woman, thy vows are traced in sand."

LORD BYRON, To Woman, l. 21. (1806)

Woman's faith, and woman's trust—

WALTER SCOTT, The Betrothed. Ch. 20. (1825)

Woman's love is writ in water!

Woman's faith is traced on sand!

W. E. AYTOUN, Charles Edward at Versailles. l. 201. (1849)

9 A fickle and changeful thing is woman ever. (Varium et mutabile semper | femina.)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. iv, l. 569. (19 B.C.)

My lord, you know what Virgil sings— Woman is various and most mutable.

TENNYSON, Queen Mary. Act iii, sc. 6, l. 77. (1875)

10 Hit is a propertie . . . To all women in the world . . . To be vnstable.

UNKNOWN, The Destruction of Troy, l. 8056. (c. 1400)

XI—Woman: Her Tongue

THOMAS ADAMS, Works, p. 150. (1630)

ARISTOPHANES, The Ecclesiazusae, l. 120. (c. 393 B. C.)

PLAUTUS, Aulularia, l. 124. (c. 210 B. C.)

Tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not (φλύαροι καὶ περιεργοί.)

New Testament: I Timothy, v, 13. (c. A. D. 62)

St. Paul is referring to young widows. The Vulgate is, "Verbosae et curiosae."

Such a clatter of words pours from her tongue that you would think all the pots and bells were being clashed together. (Verborum tanta cadit vis, tot periter pelves ac tintinnabula dicas | pulsari.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 440. (c. A. D. 120)

Her tongue runs like the clapper of a mill.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i. (1738)

Women and sparrows twitter in company.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 384. (1938) A Japanese proverb.

Babylonian Talmud: Kiddushin, fo. 49b. (c. 450)

The Rabbins have a Proverb, that ten kabs [a Hebrew dry measure] of speech descended into the world, and the women took away nine of them.

JOHN TRAPP, Commentary on I Timothy v. 13. (1647)

<sup>4</sup> Come, ladies, shall we talk a round? As men Do walk a mile, women should talk an hour. After supper: 'tis their exercise.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Philaster. Act ii. sc. 4. (1611)

THOMAS BECON, Newe Catechisme, p. 345. (1560)

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs: Brit.-Eng., p. 29. (1659)

A woman's sword is her tongue, and she does not let it rust.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 379.

(1938) A Chinese proverb. The French say the same, "La langue des femmes est leur épée, et elles ne la laissent pas rouiller."

CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 447. Japanese.

<sup>6</sup> When a man dies, the last thing that moves is his heart; in a woman her tongue.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, The Widdowes Teares. Act iv, sc. 2. (1612)

Well, miss, they say a woman's tongue is the last thing about her that dies.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. iii. (1738)

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1739

PENTADIUS, On Woman's Love. (c. A. D. 250)

The Germans say, "Es giebt nur zwei gute Weiber auf der Welt: die Eine ist gestorben, die Andere nicht zu finden" (There are only two good women in the world: one is dead, the other not to be found).

I pray you tel me, how doo you cal a good woman in Latine? Know you what Plato saith, find her, and I'll geue her a name, but to tel you the truth, there can no name be geue to a thing that neuer was, is not, & I beleue, wil neuer be in this world

There are women who appear as jewels—in books

HART, 700 Chinese Proverbs. No. 50. (1937)

8 The world is perfectly packed with good women. To know them is a middle-class education.

WILDE, Lady Windermere's Fan. Act iii. (1893)

Parodying Steele's, "To love her was a liberal education."

XIII—Woman: Her Will

9 When loving woman wants her way,
God hesitates to say her nay.

BHARTIHHARI. (c. A. D. 625) Ryder, tr.

What woman wishes God wishes. (Ce que femme veut Dieu le veut.)

MÉRY, Histoire des Proverbes, i, 257. (c. 1600)

Similarly, "Ce que veut une femme est écrit dans le ciel" (What a woman wishes is written in heaven)

10 Let euery man please his wyfe in all matters. and . . . let her haue her owne wyll. for that she wyll haue who so euer say nay.

ANDREW BOORDE, The Breviary of Healthe, fo. 96. (1547)

Women will have their will.

WILLIAM HAUGHTON, English-Men for My Money. Act v, sc. 3. (1616) JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 329. (1639)

As the Goodman saith, so say we; but as the good wife saith, so it must be.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 11. (1546)

(ἑρπηςας καὶ ἑρεϊρα, βοῶπις ὀφθαλμοὶ Ἥρη.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xviii, l. 357. (c. 850 B. C.) The exclamation became a proverb, applicable to wives who get their way against their husbands' opposition.

Woman will have both her word and her way.

JOHN GAY, Song, in Achilles. (1733)

Man has his will—but woman has her way!

O. W. HOLMES, The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 2. (1858)

<sup>3</sup> Give her her will or she'll burst, quoth the good man when his wife was dinging him.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 124. (1721)

<sup>4</sup> Women, because they cannot have their wills when they dye, they will have their wills while they live.

JOHN MANNINGTON, Diary, p. 92. (1602)

Women must have their wills while they live, because they make none when they die.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 63. (1678)

Men, dying, make their wills, but wives

Escape a task so sad;

Why should they make what all their lives

The gentle dames have had?

J. G. SAXE, Woman's Will. (1850)

The proverb says, a wife ought to have her will during her life, because she cannot make one when she dies.

SPURGEON, John Ploughman. Ch. 16. (1869)

<sup>5</sup> God hath endued women with this propertie. to bee wedded to their wils.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 94. (1576)

Biron: Is she wedded or no?

Boyet: To her will, sir.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, II, 1, 211. (1609)

<sup>6</sup> Women and their wills are dangerous ills.

SAMUEL ROWLEY, When You See Me, You Know Me, sig. L3. (1605)

<sup>7</sup> He is a Fool who thinks by force, or skill,
To turn the Current of a Womens Will.

SIR SAMUEL Tuke, The Adventures of Five Hours. Act v, sc. 3. (1663)

A woman will or won't,—depend on't;

If she will do't she will; and there's an end on't.

AARON HILL, Zara: Epilogue. (c. 1750)

Where is the man who has the power and skill

To stem the torrent of a woman's will?

For if she will, she will, you may depend on't;

And if she won't she won't; so there's an end on't.

UNKNOWN, Inscription, on pillar, Dane John Field, Canterbury, England. See Examiner (London), 31 May, 1829.

<sup>8</sup> Whilst there is a world, 'tis woman that will govern it.

VANBRUGH, The Provok'd Wife. Act III. (1697)

XIV—Woman: Her Work

<sup>9</sup> Some respite to husbands the weather may send,

But huswives affaires have never an end.

THOMAS TUSSEY, Five Hundreth Pointes of Good Husbandrie: Preface to the Books of Huswiferie. (1573)

Man's work lasts till set of sun,

Woman's work is never done.

UNKNOWN, The Roxburghe Ballads. Vol. II, p. 302. (c. 1655)

A woman's work is never done.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 50. (1670) Ray adds, "A woman's work, and washing of dishes, is never at an end."

Women's work is never done.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5810. (1732)

When Darby saw the setting sun

He swung his scythe, and home he run,

Sat down, drank off his quart and said,

"My work is done, I'll go to bed."

"My work is done!" retorted Joan,

"My work is done! Your constant tone,

But hapless woman ne'er can say

'My work is done' till judgment day."

ST. JOHN HONEYWOOD, Darby and Joan (c. 1790)

You know they say, "A woman's business is never done."

LUCY LYTTELTON CAMERON, The Cradle, p. 12 (c. 1825)

XV—Woman and Love

<sup>10</sup> A woman will bear any weight, if it's placed upon her by a man. (καὶ κε γυνὴ φέρει ἄχθος. ἐπεὶ κεν ἀνὴρ ἀναβείη.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Knights, l. 1056. (424 B. C.)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. II, eleg. 33, l. 41. (c. 24 B. C.)

Two women placed together makes cold weather

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII, i, 4, 22. (1612)

<sup>11</sup> Such great achievements cannot fail
To cast salt on a woman's tail.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. II, canto i, l. 277. (1664)

All women love great men

If young or old; it is in all the tales:

Young beauties love old poets who can love

ROBERT BROWNING, In a Balcony. (1853)

Women rather take to terrible people; prize-fighters, pirates, highwaymen, rebel generals, Grand Turks, and Bluebeards generally have a fascination for the sex; your virgin has a natural instinct to saddle your lion.

O. W. HOLMES, The Guardian Angel Ch. 13 (1867)

Mrs. Allonby: We women adore failures. They lean on us.

Illingworth: You worship successes. You cling to them.

OSCAR WILDE, A Woman of No Importance. Act i. (1893)

1 Why did she love him? Curious fool!—be still—

Is human love the growth of human will?

LORD BYRON, Lara. Canto ii, st. 22. (1814) The Italians say, "Alle belle donne le più volte toccano i brutti uomini" (Beautiful women usually fall to the lot of ugly men).

Alas! the love of women! it is known To be a lovely and a fearful thing.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 199. (1818)

2 The hearts of women sicken for love more than do the hearts of men, but honor curbs desire. (καίτοι χείρον' ἀρσένων νόσον | ταύτην νοσοῦμεν, ἀλλὰ προύστημεν καλώς.)

EURIPIDES, Andromache, l. 220. (c. 430 B.C.) Every woman loves more than a man loves, but out of shame she hides the sting of love, although she be mad for it. (πάσα γυνή φιλέει πλέον ἀνδρός· αἰδομένη δὲ κείθει κέντρον ἔρωτος, ἐρωμανέουσα καὶ αὐτή.)

NONNUS, Dionysius. Bk. xlii, l. 209. (c. A.D. 400) See Greek Anthology. Bk. x, epig. 120.

3 One night, they say, one single night makes tame a woman in a man's arms.

(καίτοι λέγονσιν ὡς μί' εὐφρόνη χαλᾷ τὸ δυσμερές γυναικὸς εἰς ἀνδρὸς λέχος.)

EURIPIDES, Daughters of Troy, l. 665 (c. 415 B.C.)

He seyde, "a woman cast hir shame away, Whan she cast off hir smok."

CHAUCER, The Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 782. (c. 1388)

Authorities both old and recent

Direct that women must be decent.

SWIFT, Strephon and Chloe. (1731)

4 How a little love and conversation improve a woman!

GEORGE FARQUHAR, The Beaux' Stratagem Act iv, sc. 2. (1706)

A woman who is loved always has success.

VICKI BAUM, Grand Hotel, p. 132. (1931)

5 One can find women who have never had one love affair, but it is rare indeed to find any who have had only one. (On peut trouver des femmes qui n'ont jamais eu de galanterie, mais il est rare d'en trouver qui n'en aient jamais eu qu'une.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 73. (1665) Women in love pardon great indiscretions more easily than little infidelities. (Les femmes qui aiment pardonnent plus aisément les grandes indiscretions que les petites infidélités.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 429.

How unhappy the woman who is in love and virtuous at the same time! (Qu'une femme est à plaindre, quand elle a tout ensemble de l'amour et de la vertu!)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes Posthumes, 548.

6 In their first passions, women love the lover, and in the others, they love love. (Dans les premières passions, les femmes aiment l'amant; et dans les autres, elles aiment l'amour.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 471. (1665)

In her first passion woman loves her lover;

In all the others, all she loves is love.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 3. (1818)

Taken from Rochefoucauld without credit.

7 Women are to be wonne with euery wind, in whose sexe ther is neither force to withstand the assaults of loue, neither constancy to remaine faithfull.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 55. (1579)

8 Whatever people may say, the great ambition of women is, believe me, to inspire love. (Quoi qu'on en puisse dire, la grande ambition des femmes est, croyez-moi, d'inspirer de l'amour.)

MOLIERE, Le Sicilien. Sc. 6, l. 39. (1667)

"I love you" is all the secret that many, nay, most women have to tell. When that is said, they are like China-crackers on the morning of the fifth of July.

O. W. HOLMES, The Professor at the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 8. (1860)

Woman wishes to be loved without a why or a wherefore; not because she is pretty, or good, or well-bred, or graceful, or intelligent, but because she is herself. (La femme veut être aimée sans raison, sans pourquoi; non parce qu'elle est jolie, ou bonne, ou bien élevée, ou gracieuse, ou spirituelle, mais parce qu'elle est.)

HENRI AMIEL, Journal Intime, 17 March, 1868

If I ever really love it will be like Mary Queen of Scots, who said of her Bothwell that she could follow him round the world in her nighty.

J. M. BARRIE, What Every Woman Knows Act ii. (1908)

9 All women can be caught; spread but your nets and you will catch them. (Cunctas! posse capi; capies, tu modo tende plagas.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 269. (c. 1 B.C.)

Whether they give or refuse, it delights women to have been asked. (Quae dant, quaeque negant, gaudent tamen esse rogatae.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 345.

A woman . . . always feels herself complimented by love.

ABEL STEVENS, Madame de Stael. Ch. 3. (c. 1860)

10 Every woman thinks herself lovable. However ugly she may be, there is none who is not pleased with her own looks. (Sibi quaeque videtur amanda; | pessima sit, nulli non sua forma placet.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 613. The French say, "No mirror ever reflected an ugly woman."

11 A woman, like the Koh-i-noor, Mounts to the price that's put on her.

COVENTRY PATMORE, The Angel in the House: The Koh-i-noor. (1860)

A woman can be anything that the man who loves her would have her be.

J. M. BARRIE, Tommy and Grisel, p. 31. (1900)

1 Nowhere in stone, paint, or poem is a lady in my line [prostitution] portrayed as using a lover well—if she wants to get on. . . . The lady that spares her lover spares herself too little. (Quae amanti parcat, eadem sibi parcat parum.)

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 174. (c. 200 B.C.)

Never will you find a woman who spares the man who loves her. (Nullum invenies quae parcat amanti.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 208. (c. A.D. 120)
Womankind more joy discovers Making fools, than keeping lovers.

JOHN WILMOT, On the Coquetry of Women, l. 71. (a. 1680)

2 There swims no goose so grey, but soon or late

She finds some honest gander for her mate.

POPE, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 98. (1714)

This I set down as a positive truth. A woman with fair opportunities and without an absolute hump, may marry WHOM SHE LIKES.

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair. Ch. 4. (1848)

3 No woman ever hates a man for being in love with her, but many a woman hates a man for being a friend to her.

POPE, Thoughts on Various Subjects. (1727)

Any woman will love any man that bothers her enough.

HENRY W. PHILLIPS, Mr. Scroggs. (1906)

4 Woman either loves or hates: there is no third course. (Aut amat aut odit mulier: nihil est tertium.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 6. (c. 43 B.C.)

Woman is nectar when she loves,

And poison when she hates.

BHARTIHARI. (C. A.D. 625) Ryder, tr.

It is naturally incident to women to enter into extremities, they are either to loving or to loathing.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace: Sinorix and Camma, p. 27. (1576)

I haue heard that women either loue entirely or hate deadly.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 95. (1579)

The more women seeme at the first to loth the more they loue at the last.

JOHN LYL, Euphues and His England, p. 364. Women are always in extremes.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia Anglo-Latina, p. 118. (1639)

Women are ever in extremes; they are either better or worse than men. (Les femmes sont extrêmes; elles sont meilleures ou pires que les hommes)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères: Des Femmes. (1688)

Oh, the women! we must forgive them much, for they love much—and many. Their hate is, in fact, only love turned inside out.

HEINRICH HEINE, Confessions. (1854)

5 Very pleasant hast thou been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women. (Amabilis super amorem mulierum.)

Man dreams of fame, while woman wakes to love.

TENNYSON, Merlin and Vivien, l. 458. (1870)

For a woman loves forever, but a man loves for a day. . . .

But the woman, 'tis ever the woman who pays.

W. D. COBB, It's the Woman Who Pays. (1916)

The last line quoted by J. L. WILLIAMS, Why Marry? Act ii. (1917)

8 Once a woman has given you her heart, you can never get rid of the rest of her.

SIR JOHN VANBRUGH, The Relapse. Act ii. (1697)

Oh! say not Woman's love is bought

With vain and empty treasure! . . .

Deep in her heart the passion glows;

She loves, and loves for ever!

ISAAC POCOCK, Song. From a musical entertainment, The Heir of Vironi, produced at Covent Garden, London, 27 Feb., 1817.

9 Fire is never sated with fuel, nor ocean with streams, nor the God of death with all creatures, nor woman with man.

UNKNOWN, Hitopadesa, ii, 113. (c. 1250)

XVI—Woman's Place is in the Home

10 Let women stay at home and hold their peace. (Ἔσθω δ' ὀδῶ μὴ βλάβη ῥίθευ.)

AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes, l. 201. (467 B.C.)

For women silence and discretion are most becoming,

And also to abide at home in peace.

"Thrice happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing!"

So much time is saved in the billing and cooing.
R. H. BARHAM, The Ingoldsby Legends: Sir Rupert the Fearless. (1842)

The time I've lost in wooing,
In watching and pursuing
The light that lies
In woman's eyes,

Has been my heart's undoing.

THOMAS MOORE, The Time I've Lost in Wooing. (a. 1852) The Germans say, "Mit liebhabereien wird viele Zeit vergeudet" (In courtship much time is wasted).

A woman, and therefore to be won.

ROBERT GREENE, Perimedes. (1588)

She 's beautiful and therefore to be woo'd:

She is a woman, therefore to be won.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI, v, 3, 78. (1591)

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore may be won.

SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus, ii, 1, 82. (1593)

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour won?

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, i, 2, 228. (1592)

Gentle thou art and therefore to be won,

Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;

And when a woman woos, what woman's son

Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed?

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xli. (1609)

Women were in their creation ordained to be wooed, and to be won.

JOHN FORD, A Line of Life, p. 59. (1620)

Her vertue and the conscience of her worth,

That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. viii, l. 502. (1667)

Every woman may be won.

SCOTT, Quentin Durward. Ch. 19. (1823)

If I am not worth the wooing, I surely am not worth the winning.

OVID, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 9, l. 9. (c. 13 B.C.)

Many desire what flees them, and hate what stands still. (Quod refugit, multae cupiunt: odere quod instat.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 717. (c. 1 B.C.)

You pursue, I fly; you fly, I pursue. Such is my mind. (Insequeris, fugio; fugis, insequor; hæc mihi mens est.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. v, epig. 83. (c. A. D. 90)
If thou flee it, it shal flee thee;
Folowe it, and folowen shal it thee.
(Se tu le suiz, il te suira, Se tu t'en fuiz, il s'en fuira.)

JEAN DE MEUNG, Roman de la Rose, l. 4357.
(c. 1270) Chaucer (?), tr., l. 4783. (c. 1365)
Flee it [love], and it will flee thee,
Follow it, and it will follow thee.

THOMAS HOWELL, H. His Devises, p. 64. (1581)
RAY, English Proverbs, p. 55 (1678) has,
"Follow love and it will flee, flee love and it will follow thee," a form cited also by FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 6258. (1732) There is a Latin proverb, "Honor sequitur fugientem" (Honor follows him who flees from it), and the same thing has been said of glory, of pleasure, and of fortune. BACON, Advancement of Learning, bk. ii, refers to "that conceit, elegantly expressed by the Emperor Charles V., 'that fortune hath somewhat the nature of a woman, if she be too much wooed she is the farther off.'" HEYWOOD, Proverbs, (1546), has, "Follow pleasure and then will pleasure flee; Flee pleasure and pleasure will follow thee." The French say, "Courez toujours après le chien, jamais il vous mordra" (Keep on running after the dog and it will never bite you).

I have pursued her as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. . . . And that hath taught me to say this:
"Love like a shadow flies when substance love pursues;

Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues."
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor, ii, 2, 208. (1601)

Follow a shadow, it still flies you,
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you.

Say, are not women truly, then,
Styled but the shadows of us men?

BEN JONSON, That Women Are but Men's Shadows. (a. 1635)

Flee, and she follows; follow, and she'll flee;
Than she there's none more coy; there's none more fond than she.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblemes. Bk. i, No. 4. (1635)
You think that you are Ann's suitor; that you are the pursuer and she the pursued; that it is your part to woo, to persuade, to prevail, to overcome. Fool: it is you who are the pursued, the marked-down quarry, the destined prey.

SHAW, Man and Superman. Act ii. (1903)
Pursued man loves to think himself pursuer.

EDMUND VANCE COOKE, From the Book of Ex-tenuations: Ruth. (1926) A columnist in the El Paso Times puts it thus, "A man always chases a woman until she catches him."

<sup>1</sup>
Doth not the Cow loe to the Bull, doth not the Mare neigh to the Horse?

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 154. (1576)

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd and were not made to woo.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii, 1, 241. (1596)

Though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus, iii, 2, 134. (1601)
All naturally fly what does pursue:

'Tis fit men should be coy when women woo.

CONGREVE, Old Batchelour. Act iv, sc. 5. (1693)
When petticoats woo, breeks may come speed.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 346. (1721)
It is Time to marry, when the Woman woos the Man.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 3019. (1732)
That you're in a terrible taking,

By all these sweet oglings I see,
But the fruit that will fall without shaking,

Indeed is too mellow for me.

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish, p. 232.

<sup>4</sup>
Affection faints not like a pale-fac'd coward,
But then woos best when most his choice is froward.

SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis, l. 569. (1593)
I now will court her in the conqueror's style:

"Come, see, and overcome."

MASSINGER, Maid of Honour. Act ii, sc. 1. (1632)
I'll woo her as the lion woos his bride.

JOHN HOME, Douglas. Act i, sc. 1. (1756)

He that climbs the tall tree has won right to the fruit,

He that leaps the wide gulf should prevail in his suit.

WALTER SCOTT, The Talisman. Ch. 26. (1825)
Ah, me! it was he that won her saying.

ROYALL TYLER, The Contrast, Act ii. (1790)

II—Wooing: Advice

He that will win his dame must do
As Love does when he bends his bow;
With one hand thrust the lady from,
And with the other pull her home.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 1, l. 449. (1663)

But friends are men, and love can baffle lords:
The earl both woos and courts her for himself.

ROBERT GREENE, Friar Bacon, l. 639. (1594)

Friendship is constant in all other things
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself
And trust no agent.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, ii, 1, 182. (1598)

In the way of love and glory,
Each tongue best tells his own story.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, Of the Choice of a Wife. (a. 1613)

He went to woo her for a friend and married her himself.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 304. (1817)

Archly the maiden smiled, and, with eyes overrunning with laughter,
Said, in a tremulous voice, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"

LONGFELLOW, The Courtship of Miles Standish.
Pt. iii, concluding lines. (1858)

Frivolous minds are won by trifles. (Parva leves capiunt animos.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 159. (c. 1 B. C.)

Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often in their silent kind
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona,
iii, i, 89. (1594)

It was a happy age when a man might have wooed his wench with a pair of kid leather gloves, a silver thimble, or with a tawdry lace; but now a velvet gown, a chain of pearl, or a coach with four horses will scarcely serve the turn.

BARNABY RICH, My Lady's Looking Glass. (c.
1600)

Giving presents to a woman to secure her love, is as vain as endeavouring to fill a sieve with water.

EDWARD WARD, Female Policy, p. 23. (1716)

Do not begin your wooing with the maid. (Non

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 386. (c. 1 B. C.)

Employ soft flatteries, and words which delight the ear. (Blanditias molles, auremque iuvantia verba | adfer.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. ii, l. 159. (c. 1 B. C.)

If you can, truly; if not, at any rate readily. (Si poteris, vere, si minus, apta tamen.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 228.

A man shal winne us best with flaterye.

CHAUCER, Tale of the Wyf of Bath, l. 76. (c. 1388)

Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Though ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona,
iii, 1, 102. (1594)

The firmest purpose of a woman's heart
To well-timed, artful flattery may yield.

GEORGE LILLO, Elmerick. (1740)

Have you found out that every woman is infallibly to be gained by every sort of flattery, and every man by one sort or other?

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 16 March, 1752.

The surest way to hit a woman's heart is to take aim kneeling.

DOUGLAS JERROLD, The Way to a Woman's Heart. (c. 1850)

III—Wooing and Wedding

Never wedding, ever wooing.

Still a love-lorn heart pursuing.

Read you not the wrong you're doing?

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Maid's Remonstrance.
(1822)

Always to court and never to wed

Is the happiest life that ever was led.

H. W. THOMPSON, Body, Boots and Britches, p.
482. (1940)

A man may woo where he will, but he will wed where his hap is.

FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 12. (c. 1595)

A man may woo whar he will, but wed whar he is wiert [destined].

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish, p. 230. (1678)

A man may woo where he will, but wed where his wife is.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 27. (1721)

Had I not been wight, . . .

The termes that longe to weddyng had warnde mee.

First wooyng for woing, banna for bannyng.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 7. (1546)

He vnto hir a goodly tale began,
More like a wooer than a wedded man.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 9.

<sup>1</sup>
The wooing should be a daye after the wedding.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 84. (1579)
I wonder at his haste: that I must wed
Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.
SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet, iii, 5, 119. (1595)

The Wooing was a Day after the Wedding.
THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4840. (1732)

<sup>2</sup>
Men . . . dream in courtship, but in wedlock wake.

POPE, The Wife of Bath, l. 103. (1714) Quoted by CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 38. (1875)

<sup>3</sup>
Men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, iv, 1, 147. (1600)
Women are angels, wooing:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:
That she belov'd knows nought that knows not this:

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus, i, 2, 312. (1601)

What a pity it is that marryin' spoils courtin'.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Wise Saws. Ch. 17. (1843)

You must not contrast too strongly the hours of courtship with the years of possession.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, 17 March, 1845.

Pleasant the snaffle of Courtship, improving the manners and carriage;

But the colt who is wise will abstain from the terrible thorn-bit of Marriage.

11. (1594) MARRY IN HASTE, REPENT AT LEI-SURE, see under MARRIAGE.

WOOL

<sup>5</sup>
Many a one goes for wool and comes back shorn. (Muchos van por lana y vuelven tras-quilados.)

CERVANTES, DON QUIXOTE. Pt. i, ch. 7. (1605)
Repeated in ii, 14, 43, 67. A Spanish proverb that goes back to a poem of Fernan Gonzales
(c. 1250). The Germans say, "Mancher geht nach Wolle aus und kommt geschoren selbst nach Haus." An English variant is, "Many go out for clothes and come home stripped"

Many go out for wool, and come home shorn.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 220. (1678)

Several come for wool that return shorn.

THOMAS D'URFHEY, *The Comical History of Don
Quixote*. Pt. i, act iv, sc. 1. (1694)

Many go to seek wool, and come home shorn

SAMUEL PALMER, Proverbs, p. 148. (1710)

Lack-a-day! thou art one of those that come out for wool, and art sure to go home shorn.

SCOTT, Fortunes of Nigel. Ch. 23. (1822)

You are one of the happy sheep that go out for wool, and come home shorn.

SCOTT, St. Ronan's Well. Ch. 36. (1824)

If such as came for wool, sir, went home shorn,
Where was the wrong I did them?

BROWNING, Mr. Sludge "The Medium." (1864)
Some go [to Ascot] intent on repairing the ravages of Epsom or Newmarket; and not a few
. . . who go for wool come away shorn.

Well, well (quoth she) many wels, many buckets.
Yes (quoth he) and many woordes, many buffets.
JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 7. (1546)

<sup>2</sup> A word is like a bird: when he has sent it forth a man cannot recapture it.

AHIKAR, Teachings. Col. vii, l. 98. (c. 575 B.C.)
A four-horse chariot cannot overtake the spoken word.

TZU KUNG, Aphorism. Quoted by CONFUCIUS,
Analects. Bk. xii, ch. 8. (c. 500 B.C.) Tzu Kung is paraphrasing a still older Chinese proverb, "Yi yen chi ch'u, shih ma nan chui" (One word let out, a swift horse cannot overtake it).

It is as easy to recall a stone thrown violently from the hand as a word which has left your tongue. (οὐτ' ἐκ χειρὸs μεθόντα καρτερὸν λίθον ῥᾶπον κατασχεῖν, οὐτ' ἀπὸ γλώσσης λόγον.)

A Word spoke, is an Arrow let fly.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 486. (1732)

While the word is in your mouth it is your own;
when 'tis once spoken, 'tis another's.

NATHAN BAILEY, Dictionary: Word. (1736)

The arrow belongs not to the archer when it has once left the bow; the word no longer belongs to the speaker when it has once passed his lips.

HEINRICH HEINE, Religion and Philosophy:
Preface. (1834)

A word and a stone let go cannot be recalled.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 88. (1875)

Boys flying kites haul in their white winged birds.
You can't do that way when you're flying words.

"Careful with fire," is good advice we know;

"Careful with words," is ten times doubly so.

Thoughts unexpressed may sometimes fall back dead,

But God Himself can't kill them when they're said.

10

They spake winged words one to another. (πρὸς ἀλλήλους ἔπεα πτερόεντ' ἀγόρευον.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. iii, l. 155. (c. 850 B. C.)

"Winged words" (ἔπεα πτερόεντα) is the phrase which Homer uses most frequently. It was adopted in the German, Geflügelte Worte, by George Büchmann as the title of his book of proverbs and famous phrases, and Büchmann's editor states that the phrase occurs 46 times in the Iliad and 58 times in the Odyssey.

Her word remained unwinged. (τῇ δ' ἀπτερος ἔπλετο μῦθος.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xix, l. 29. (c. 850 B. C.)

That is, unspoken. ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, x, 66 gives as the Latin equivalent, "Qui continet arcanum."

The Poet [Homer], in fact, says that words are "winged": neither when you let go from your hand a winged thing is it easy to get it back again, nor when a word is let slip from the mouth is it possible to arrest and control it, but it is borne away "circling on swift wings." (λαίψηρά κυκλώσας πτερὰ.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: On Garrulity. Sec. 507A

(c. A. D. 95) The last phrase is probably a quotation from the Epodes of Archilochus. See also Moralia, 750B.

Our words have wings, but fly not where we would.

GEORGE ELIOT, Spanish Gypsy Bk. iii. (1868)

II—Words: Their Use

See also Style

2 Words are the dress of thoughts; which should no more be presented in rags, tatters, and dirt, than your person should.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 25 Jan., 1750.

3 When one is treating of majestic topics, the style rises with the subject. (Ipsae res verba rapiunt—literally. "things themselves bring words.")

H. D. THOREAU, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers. (1849)

The high prize of life, the crowning fortune of a man, is to be born with a bias to some pursuit which finds him in employment and happiness

EMERSON, The Conduct of Life: Considerations by the Way. (1860)

Man's work is to labour and heaven—

As best he may—earth here with heaven;

'Tis work for work's sake that he's needing.

ROBERT BROWNING, Pacchiarotto. St. 21. (1876)

Work thou for pleasure: paint or sing or carve

The thing thou lovest, though the body starve

KENYON COX, The Gospel of Art. Published in The Century Magazine, Feb., 1895.

And only The Master shall praise us, and only The Master shall blame;

And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;

But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star, Shall draw the Thing as he sees It for the God of Things as They are!

<sup>5</sup> He who wishes to get the kernel from the nut must crack the nut. (Qui e nuce nuculeum esse volt, frangit nucem.)

PLAUTUS, Curculio, l. 55. (c. 200 B. C.) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ix, 55, with the comment that the meaning of the proverb is that he who wishes to assuage his appetite cannot escape labor. Common in some form to most languages. The French say, "Qui veut manger le noyau, qu'il casse la noix," or "Il faut casser le noyau pour avoir l'amande"; the Germans, "Wer den Kern essen will, muss die Nuss krachen." "No work, no recompense" is a short English variant, or, expanded into a jingle, "No bees, no honey; no work, no money."

Yf ye wolde the swetnes haue of the kynrell,
Be content to byte vpon the harde shell.

Antiq. Repertory (1809), iv, 416. (c. 1500)

I see the prouerbe is true, who will the curnell of the nut must breake the shell.

JOHN GRANGE, Golden Aphroditis, sig. 13. (1577)
Be it so that we desire the sweetnesse of the well relisht kernell, then must we likewise crack the hard shell.

JOHN SWAN, Speculum Mundi, p. 465. (1635)

He that will eat the kernel must crack the nut.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 84. (1670)

He that wou'd obtain a kernel, must first hazard his teeth in breaking the shell.

CHARLES COFFEY, The Beggar's Wedding. Act ii, sc. 3. (1729)

<sup>6</sup> If any would not work, neither should he eat. (εἰ τις οὐ θέλει ἐργάζεσθαι μηδὲ ἐσθίειν.)

New Testament: II Thessalonians, iii, 10. (c. A. D. 53) The Vulgate is, "Quoniam si quis non vult operari, nec manducet."

Who hath not worked shall not eat.

Midrash: Genesis Rabbah, xiv, 10. (c. 550)

Salomon seith: that "he that travaileth . . . shal eten breed; but he that is idyl . . . shall dye for hunger."

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 51. (c. 1387)

It is written, Who will not work shall not eat (Il est escript: Qui non laborat, non manige ducat.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. iii, ch. 41. (1545)

He who will not work shall not eat.

CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH, Motto, while Governor of the Jamestown Colony, Virginia. 1608

He that will not labour must not eat.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca, p. 109. (1633)

He that will not Work will want.

OSWALD DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 190. (1709)

Though this is a fable, the moral is good:

If you live without work, you must live without food.

UNKNOWN, The Ant and the Cricket. (c. 1850)

WORKMAN

I—The World: What It Is

<sup>2</sup> The world is not a place for enjoyment, but a place where humanity is on trial.

ABDULLAH ANSARI, Invocations. (C. 1075)
I account this world a tedious Theatre,
For I doe play a part in't 'gainst my will.
JOHN WEBSTER, The Dutchesse of Malfy. Act iv, sc. 1. (1614)

This world is not the scene of happiness.
SIR SAMUEL TUKE, The Adventures of Five Hours. Act v, last line. (1663)

This world is truly termed a vale of tears.
F. E. SMEDLEY, Frank Fairleigh. Ch. 44. (1850)
Frequently repeated throughout the book

<sup>3</sup> This world is like the buckets of the well: while the full one at the top is being emptied, the empty one at the bottom is being filled.
SIMEON ASHKENAZI (?), Yalkut Bhar, 665. (c. 1250) Another version is: "The world is like a ladder: while one goes up, another comes down." Cited by GOLDMAN, Proverbs of the Sages, p. 357, as a familiar saying.

Thus fareth the world that one goth vp and another goth down.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., Reynart the Foxe (Arber), xxxiii, 97. (1481)

The world is a ladder, one goeth up, the other down.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs: Ital.-Eng., p. 1. (1659) The Italian is, "Il mondo è fatto a scale, Chi le scende, e chi le sale."

The world is a Ladder for some to go up, and some down.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4841. (1732)

<sup>4</sup> This is what I see the world to be: it is like a closed casket in which we are placed and wherein we spend our time, through our ignorance, in folly. When Death opens the lid of the casket, each one who has wings takes his flight to eternity, but he who is without wings remains in the casket, a prey to a thousand afflictions.

ATTAR, Mentiq Allayr. (c. 1200)

<sup>5</sup> The world's a bubble, and the life of man less than a span; . . .

Who then to frail mortality shall trust,
But limns on water, or but writes in dust.

SIR FRANCIS BACON, The World. (a. 1626) A paraphrase of a Greek epigram by Posidippus. See Greek Anthology, bk. ix, epig. 359. Sometimes wrongly attributed to Sir Henry Wotton, but positively ascribed to Bacon by Thomas Farnby, a contemporary and a scholar (see Florilegium Epigrammatum. 1629), and by Izaak Walton, a friend of Wotton (see Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 513. 1651).

This bubble world.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblemes. Bk. i, No. 4. (1635)
The world itself, and all the world's command
Is but a bubble.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblemes. Bk. i, No. 6.
The world is full of care, and much like unto a bubble;

Women and care and care and women, and women and care and trouble.

NATHANIEL WARD, Epigram. (c. 1647)
Happy the man who . . . gets acquainted with the world early enough to make it his bubble, at an age when most people are the bubbles of the world!

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 6 May, 1751.

<sup>6</sup> The world is a long journey.

NICHOLAS BRETON, Crossing of Proverbs. (1616)
The world is a wide parish.

JAMES HOWELL, British Proverbs, p. 12. (1659)
The world's a wide place.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii. (1738)

<sup>7</sup> The World was made to be inhabited by Beasts, but studied and contemplated by Man
SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. i. sec 13. (1643)

The World to me is but a dream or mock-show, and we all therein but Pantalones and Anticks

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici, i, 41.
For the World, I count it not an Inn, but an Hospital; and a place not to live in, but to dye in SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici, ii, 11.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. ii, ch. 4. (1834)

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 523. (1938)
An Arabic proverb

<sup>10</sup> This world nis but a thurghfare ful of wo, And we ben pilgrimes, passage to and fro; Deeth is an ende of every worldly sore.

CHAUCEER, Knights Tale, l. 1939. (c. 1386)
We are in this life as it were in another man's house . . . In Heaven is our home, in the World is our Inn.

PAUL GERHARDT, Meditations. No. 38. (1630)

Nor is this lower world but a huge inn,
And men the rambling passengers.

JAMES HOWELL, The Vote. Prefixed to his Familiar Letters. (1645)

Like Pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

JOHN DRYDEN, Palamon and Arcite. Bk. iii, l. 887. (1700) An adaptation of The Knight's Tale.

This World 's an Inn, all Travellers are we;
And this World's Goods th' Accommodations be.
FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1744.

WILLIAM DRUMMOND, The Book of the World. (1623)

Let the great book of the world be your serious study.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 9 July, 1750.

The world is a beautiful book, but of little use to him who cannot read it. (Il mondo è un bel libro, ma poco serve a chi non lo sa leggere.)

GOLDONI, Pamela. Act i, sc. 14. (c. 1760) "Le monde est le livre des femmes" (The world is woman's book) is attributed to Rousseau, and "Le monde est un espèce de livre" (The world is a sort of book), to Lamartine. See under TRAVEL.

DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 273. (1709)

<sup>3</sup> The World is all a carcass, smoke and vanity,
The shadow of a shadow, a play
And in one word, just Nothing.

OWEN FELLTHAM, Resolves. (1623) A paraphrase of the Latin lines said to have been left by Lipsius, to be inscribed on his tomb

The world is naught.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 219. (1639)

This world is nothing except it tend to another

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 384. (1640)
Purchase the next world with this; so shalt thou win both.

R. C. TRENCH, On the Lessons in Proverbs, p. 124. (1853) An Arabic proverb.

<sup>4</sup> This world's a city, full of straying streets;
And death's the Market-place. where each one meets.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Two Noble Kinsmen Act i, sc. 5. (c. 1613)

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 94. (1578)
Quoting Antonio Guevara.

The worlde is nought els, but a Caribdis, where our hartes do perish, and a Scilla, wherein al our thoughts are smothered.

FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 94. Quoting Guevara.

<sup>6</sup> What, in fact, is the world? A glass which shines,

Which a breath has made, and which a breath can destroy.

(Quel est-il en effet? C'est un verre qui luit, Qu'un souffle a produit. et qu'un souffle peut detruire.)

GILLES DE CAUX, L'Horloge de Sable. (1745)
See D'ISRAELI, Curiosities of Literature.

<sup>7</sup> Now here now there, now to now fro,
Now up now down, the world goth so,
And ever hath done and ever shal.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis: Prologue, l. 565. (1390)

Behold the world, how it is whirled round,
And for it is so whirl'd is named so.

SIR JOHN DAVIES, Orchestra. St. 34. (1596)

Well—well the world must turn upon its axis,
And all mankind turn with it, heads or tails

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 4. (1818)

The world is a wheel, and it will all come round right.

DISRAELI, Endymion. Ch. 70. (1880)

The world rolls round for ever like a mill;
It grinds out death and life, and good and ill
It has no purpose, heart or mind or will.

JAMES THOMSON, The City of Dreadful Night. Sec. viii. (1874)

R. A. HABAS, Morals for Moderns, p. 252. (1939)

Compos'd as then: few men and many beasts.

LORD HERBERT OF CHERBURY, The State Progress of Ill (1608)

MOHAMMED, Sunnah. (c. 630) Sayings of Muhammad, p. 118.

The world is not a "prison house" but a kind of spiritual kindergarten where millions of bewildered infants are trying to spell God with the wrong blocks.

E. A. ROBINSON, Letter to the Bookman, March, 1897, p. 7, referring to a short criticism of his first book, The Torrent and the Night Before, which Harry Thurston Peck had written for the Bookman, Feby., 1897. p. 510, in which he had said, "The world is not beautiful to him, but a prison-house," echoing Goethe's "Die Welt ist ein Gefängniss" (The world is a prison)

<sup>11</sup> This world is all a fleeting show.
For man's illusion given.

THOMAS MOORE, This World Is All a Fleeting Show. (a. 1852)

ROGER NORTH, Lives of the Norths (Bohn), ii, 150. (1742) Quoted as a proverb.

PETRONIUS, Fragments. Frag. 10. (c. A. D. 60)
Quoted by JEAN DE SARISBERY, Polycrates, iii, 8, and by MONTAIGNE, iii, 10, with the French, "Tout le monde joue la comédie." Used as a motto over the door of Shakespeare's theatre, the Globe, Bankside, London, in an adapted form, "Quod fere totus mundus exerceat histrionem" (Almost all the world are players). Another Latin proverb is, "Mundus scena, vita transitus; venisti, vidisti, abiisti" (The world is a stage, life is a walk across it; you have come, you have seen, you have departed).

Pythagoras said that this world was like a stage, Whereon many play their parts.

RICHARD EDWARDS, Damon and Pithias (a. 1566)

Another used likewise to say, that this world was a stage, wee the players whiche present the Comedie, and the gods, the lookers on.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 118. (1574) Pettie, tr.

The world's a stage, where God's omnipotence. His justice, knowledge, love and providence, Do act the parts DU BARTAS, Devine Weekes and Workes. Wk. i, day 1. (1591) Sylvester, tr.

I take the world to be but as a stage,
Where net-masked men do play their personage.

DU BARTAS, Devine Weekes and Workes: Dialogue Between Heraclitus and Democritus

I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano,
A stage where every man must play a part.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice, i, 1 77. (1597)

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players.
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, ii, 7, 139 (1600)

The world's a theatre, the earth a stage,
Which God and Nature do with actors fill.

THOMAS HEYWOOD, Apology for Actors. (1612)

The world's a stage on which all parts are played.

MIDDLETON, Game of Chess. Act v, sc. 2. (1624)

The world is a stage; each plays his part and receives his portion. (De wereld is een schouwtooneel; Elk speelt zijn rol, en krijgt zijn deel.)

WINSGHOTEN, Seeman. (1681) See BOHN, Polyglot of Foreign Proverbs, p. 307.

Life's little stage is a small eminence.

YOUNG, Night-Thoughts. Nt. ii, l. 360. (1742)

Thus, Tim, Philosophers suppose
The World consists of Puppet-shows,
Where petulant, conceited Fellows
Perform the part of Punchinelloes.

SWIFT, Mud Mullinix, l. 133. (1728)

God is the author, men are only the players. (Dieu est le poète, les hommes ne sont que les acteurs.)

HONORÉ DE BALZAC, Socrate Chrétien. (a. 1850)

The world's a stage,—as Shakespeare said, one day;

The stage a world—was what he meant to say

O. W. HOLMES, Prologue, l. 9. (1857)

In this playhouse of infinite forms I have had my play.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE, Gitanjali. No. 96. (1913)
If this world be a stage, what hours we give
To tedious make-up in the tiring-room.

JOHN ERSKINE, At the Front. (1918)
There is that smaller world which is the stage, and that larger stage which is the world.

ISAAC GOLDBERG, The Theatre of George Jean Nathan, p. 3. (1926)

Life furnishes the stage, and we set the scene
Meditations in Wall Street, p. 137. (1940)

The world's a stage: We act but can't rehearse
DAVID MCCORN, Ballade of the Ultimate Necessity. (1941)

<sup>2</sup> This fine old world of ours is but a child
Yet in the go-cart. Patience! give it time
To learn its limbs: there is a hand that guides
TENNYSON, The Princess: Conclusion, l. 77 (1847)

no man sees it.

THOMAS TRAHERNE, Centuries of Meditations. (a. 1704)

The world is a mirror; show thyself in it, and it will reflect thy image.

JOHN LEWIS BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 49. (1817)

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair. Ch. 2. (1848)

<sup>4</sup> I have often said, and oftener think, that this world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those that feel—a solution of why Democritus laughed and Heraclitus wept

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to Sir Horace Mann, 31 Dec., 1769.

GEORGE WHETSTONE, The World. (a. 1587)

The World is a Net, the more we stir in it, the more we are entangled.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4842. (1732)

II—World: Apothegms

<sup>6</sup> Give me a place to stand and I will move the world. (δός μοι πῶς καὶ τὴν γῆν κινήσω.)

ARCHIMEDES OF SYRACUSE, Apothegm. (c. 220 B. C.) See PLINY, Naturalis Historia, vii, 37

Given in slightly different form in Pappus Alexandr. Collectio, viii, x, 11. Sometimes amplified to, "Give me a lever long enough, and a fulcrum strong enough, and single-handed I can move the world."

Archimedes declared that, if there was another world and he could go to it, he could move this

PLUTARCH, Lives: Marcellus. Ch. 14, sec. 7 (c. A. D. 110)

What Archimedes said of the mechanical powers may be applied to reason and liberty. "Had we," said he, "a place to stand upon, we might raise the world."

THOMAS PAINE, Rights of Man. (1791)

We have now got a lever to move the world
 BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Endymion. Ch. 45. (1880)
 Don't talk to me of your Archimedes' lever.
 Give me the right word and the right accent and
 I will move the world.

JOSEPH CONRAD, A Personal Record: Preface.
 (1923)

The more a Man drinketh of the World, the more it intoxicateth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.
 (1612)

He did not think, with the Caliph Omar Ben Adalaziz, that it was necessary to make a hell of this world to enjoy paradise in the next.

Wonder is the basis of worship.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Journal, 8 June, 1830

<sup>9</sup> Every one's true worship was that which he found in use in the place where he chanced to be.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 12. (1580) See also under ROME.

<sup>10</sup> Worship does not consist in slaughtering fattened bulls, or in hanging up offerings of gold and silver, or in pouring coins into a temple treasury, but in a will that is reverent and upright. (Colitur autem non taurorum opimis corporibus contrucidatis nec auro argentoque suspenso nec in thesauros stipe infusa, sed pia et recta voluntate.)

SENECA, Ad Lucillum. Epist. cxv, sec. 5. (c. A. D. 64)

WORST

2 To many salary does not give salt. (Salarium non dat multis salem.)

GIACOMO FACCIOLATI, Lexicon: Sal. (a. 1769) "Salarium" meant originally the money given to soldiers for salt, salt-money, and later acquired the more general significance of stipend, allowance, or salary. Hence the derivation of the proverb that a person was not worth his salt, i. e. the money given him with which to buy salt.

The captain . . . is not worth his salt.
MARRYAT, The King's Own. Ch. 52. (1830)

WREN

<sup>1</sup> Fool that I was! upon my eagle's wings
I bore this wren . . . And now he mounts above me.

DRYDEN, All for Love. Act ii, sc. 1. (1678)
There to surmount what bears me up, and sing
Like the victorious wren perch'd on the eagle's wing.

SWIFT, To Mr. Congreve, l. 37. (1693)
Perch'd on the eagle's towering wing,
The lowly linnet loves to sing.

COLLEY CIBBER, Birthday Ode. (c. 1700)
Thus the fable tells us, that the wren mounted as high as the eagle, by getting upon his back

RICHARD STEELE, The Tatler. No. 224. (1710)
The Bird of Jove shall toil no more
To teach the humble Wren to soar.

SWIFT, Apollo's Edict, l. 25. (1721)

WRETCHEDNESS

<sup>5</sup> It is easy to mock the wretched. (Facile est miserum inridere.)

PLAUTUS, Curculio, l. 239. (c. 200 B. C.)
Prudence is the first thing to desert the wretched.
(Miseros prudentia prima relinquit.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. iv, epis. 12, l. 47. (A. D. 13)
'Tis hard to be wretched, but worse to be known so.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 579. (1640)

<sup>6</sup> The wretched think both too little and too much. (Et deest et superest miseris cogitatio.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 178. (c. 43 B. C.)
How wretched to be forced to crush him you fain would save! (Quam miserum est cogi op-primere quem saluum vellis!)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 571.

found among the wretched. (Plus impetus, maiores constantiam. penes miseros.)

TACITUS, Agricola. Ch. 15. (c. A. D. 98)

<sup>9</sup> Not inexperienced in wretchedness, I have tried to succour the wretched. (Non ignara mali, miseri succurrere disco.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. i, l. 630. (19 B. C.)

WRINKLE

<sup>10</sup> Wrinkles. the d—d democrats, won't flatter.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto x, st. 24. (1820)

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 654. (1732)

<sup>12</sup> No piety can delay the wrinkles. (Nec pietas moram | rugis.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. ii, ode 14, l. 2. (23 B. C.)

When you try to conceal your wrinkles, Polla, by the use of bean-meal, you deceive yourself, not me. (Lomento rugas uteri quod condere.
temptas, | Polla, tibi ventrem, non mihi labra linis.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. iii, epig. 42. (c. A. D. 90)

<sup>13</sup> Thou hast filled me with wrinkles, which is a witness against me. (Rugae meae testimonium dicunt contra me.)

Old Testament: Job, xvi, 8. (c. 350 B. C.)

WRITER

<sup>14</sup> It is scarcely possible for authors to be admired and at the same time to excel.

FRANCIS BACON, Of the Advancement of Learning: Preface. (1605)

So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould.

EDMUND WALLER, To Mr. Killigrew. (a. 1687)

He who pleases many must have some species of merit.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works (Hawkins), ii, 279
(c. 1770)

<sup>15</sup> All people have their enemies, especially authors.

GEORGE BORROW, Lavengro. Ch. 66. (1851)

<sup>16</sup> That writer does the most, who gives his reader the most knowledge, and takes from him the least time.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon: Preface. (1820)

1 It is a hard and nice Subject for a man to write of himself. It grates his own heart to say any thing of disparagement, and the Readers Ears to hear any thing of praise from him.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Of My Self. (a. 1667)
Every busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises that he gives himself
DILLON, tr., Art of Poetry, l. 475. (1680)

2 Some writers, usually pedants, imagine that they can supply, by the labours of industry, the deficiencies of nature.

ISAAC D'ISRAËLI, Curiosities of Literature: Imitators. (1791)

3 Th' unhappy man who once has trail'd a pen,
Lives not to please himself, but other men.
DRYDEN, Prologue to Lee's Caesar Borgia, l. 1. (1680)

For thee we dim the eyes, and stuff the head
With all such reading as was never read;
For thee explain a thing till all men doubt it,
And write about it, Goddess, and about it.
POPE, The Dunciad. Bk. iv, l. 249. (1740)

4 Talent alone cannot make a writer. There must be a man behind the book.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Goethe. (1850)
The writer, like the priest, must be exempted from secular labor. His work needs a frolic health; he must be at the top of his condition.

EMERSON, Poetry and Imagination. (1875)

5 Every habit and faculty is confirmed and strengthened by the corresponding actions, that of walking by walking, that of running by running. If you wish to be a good reader, read; if you wish to be a good writer, write.
(δὲν γραφικός, γράφει.)

EPICTETUS, Discourses. Bk. ii, ch. 18, sec. 2. (c. A. D. 100)

The fondness for writing grows with writing.
(Crescit scribendo scribendi studium.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. (1523)
Scribendo discas scribere. [By writing you learn to write.] It is only by writing ill that you can attain to write well.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. BOSWELL, Life, 16 Apr., 1763.
The more a man writes, the more he can write.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Lectures on Dramatic Literature, p. 77. (1820)

6 Nothing gives an author so much pleasure as to find his works respectfully quoted by other learned authors.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1758

7 Tailors and Writers must mind the Fashion

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4301. (1732)

8 The most original authors of modern times are so, not because they create anything new, but only because they are able to say things in a manner as if they had never been said before.

GOETHE, Sprüche in Prosa. (1819)

9 Choose a subject, ye who write, suited to your strength, and ponder long what your shoulders refuse, and what they are able to bear. (Sumite materiam vestris, qui scribitis, aequam viribus et versate diu, quid ferre recusent, quid valeant umeri.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 38. (c. 20 B. C.)

Dear authors! suit your topics to your strength, And ponder well your subject and its length.

LORD BYRON, Hints from Horace, l. 59. (1811)

10 The chief glory of every people arises from its authors.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Dictionary: Preface. (1755)

An author! 'tis a venerable name!
How few deserve it, and what numbers claim!
EDWARD YOUNG, To Mr. Pope. Epis. ii, l. 15 (a. 1765)

11 Bad writers are those who try to express their own feeble ideas in the language of good ones
G. C. LICHTENBERG, Reflections. (1799)

12 What a writer asks of his reader is not so much to like as to listen.

H. W. LONGFELLOW, Letter to J. S. Dwight, 10 Dec., 1847.

13 His powers betray the author. (Prodent auctorem vires.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. iv, epis. 13, l. 11. (A. D. 13)

PETRONIUS, Satyricon. Sec. 83. (c. A. D. 60)

A man of letters, and of manners too!

COWPER, The Task. Bk. ii, l. 782. (1784)

You must not suppose, because I am a man of letters, that I never tried to earn an honest living

SHAW, The Irrational Knot: Preface. (1884)

15 Pen-shouter. (καλαμοβοάς.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: On Garrulity. Sec. 514D (c. A. D. 95.) A word coined to describe Antipater, who dared not conduct an oral argument with Carneades.

Admitted into the company of paper-blurrers
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, An Apologie for Poetrie: Causes of Defect. (a. 1586)

Now a scribbler, who was once a man.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. i, l. 84. (1728)

16 Authors are judged by strange capricious rules.

The great ones are thought mad, the small ones fools.

ALEXANDER POPE, Prologue for Three Hours After Marriage. (1717)

Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old; It is the rust we value, not the gold.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 35. (1732)

17 Like author, like book.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 15. (1670)

JOSEPH ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest: Literature: Poets. No. 16. (c. 1870)

WALTER BAGEHOT, Literary Studies: The First Edinburgh Reviewers. (a. 1877)

WRITING

<sup>3</sup> He that will write well in any tongue must follow this counsel of Aristotle: to speak as the common people do, to think as wise men do.

ROGER ASCHAM, Toxophilus. (1545)

All men commonly delight to write as men ought to doe, and to speak as men use to doe.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 141. (1574) Pettie, tr.

Write with the learned, but speak with the vulgar.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 145. (1678)

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5837. (1732)

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1738

[He] wrote like an angel, but talked like poor Poll.

DAVID GARRICK, of Oliver Goldsmith. (1774)

One should write as nearly as possible as one speaks, and not speak too much as one writes. (Il faut écrire le plus possible comme on parle. et ne pas trop parler comme on écrit.)

SAINTE-BEUVE, Les Cahiers, p. 121. (a. 1869)

<sup>4</sup> In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaister of the wall of the king's palace. . . . And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN. (Haec est autem scriptura quae digesta est: MANE, THECEL, PHARES.) This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. TEKEL; Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting. PERES; thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.

Old Testament: Daniel, v, 5 and 25-28. (c. 170 B.C.) Hence, "The writing on the wall," or "The handwriting on the wall."

'Tis like the Writing on the Wall.

SWIFT, Run Upon the Bankers, l. 52. (1720)

The handwriting was on the wall, unseen by man

CHARLES KINGSLEY, Hereward the Wake. Ch. 18. (1866)

Those pregnant words . . . seemed to be written, like Belshazzar's warning on the wall, in letters of fire.

JAMES PAYN, By Proxy. Ch. 38 (1878)

<sup>5</sup> All writing comes by the grace of God.

EMERSON, Essays: Experience. (1841)

He that writes to himself writes to an eternal public.

EMERSON, Essays: Spiritual Laws.

<sup>6</sup> Be careful that you write accurately rather than much. (Cura ut exacte scribas, potius quam multa.)

ERASMUS, Philodoxus. (a. 1536)

THOMAS PAINE, The Rights of Man. Ch. 2. (1791)

Incessant scribbling is death to thought.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Letter to John Carlyle. 28 March, 1831.

<sup>7</sup> Ask how to live? Write, write, write, anything.

JOHN FLETCHER, Wit Without Money. Act ii (c. 1614)

I lived to write, and wrote to live.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Italy: A Character, l. 16. (c. 1820)

<sup>8</sup> If you would not be forgotten, as soon as you are dead and rotten, either write things worth reading, or do things worth the writing.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1738.

Next to doing things that deserve to be written, there is nothing that gets a man more credit, or gives him more pleasure, than to write things that deserve to be read.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters. (1739)

I am convinced more and more every day that fine writing is, next to fine doing, the top thing in the world.

KEATS, Letter to J. H. Reynolds, 23 Aug., 1819.

Fine writing is generally the effect of spontaneous thoughts and a laboured style.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE. Of Writing and Books (1764)

<sup>9</sup> Ye maie wryte to your freendes that ye are in helth.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 4. (1546)

He may write to his friends. Of a drunkard

FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 54. (c. 1595)

He may even go write to his friends. We say it of a man when all his hopes are gone.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 176 (1670)

<sup>10</sup> Writing in a folded tablet many signs and deadly. (γράφας ἐν πίνακι πτυκτῷ θυμοφθόρα πολλά.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. vi, l. 169. (c. 850 B.C.) The only passage in Homer which suggests knowledge of the art of writing.

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 133. (c. 20 B.C.)

Translators, traitors. (Traduttori, traditori.)

R. C. TRENCH, On the Lessons in Proverbs, p. 28. (1853) Traitors because unfaithful to the genius of the original.

1 Nor would Latium be more supreme in arms than in letters were it not that her poets, one and all, cannot brook the toil and tedium of the file. (Limae labor et mora.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 290. (c. 20 B.C.) That work was taken from me while it was on the anvil and my writing lacked the last touch of the file. (Ultima lima.)

OID, Tristia. Bk. i, epis. 7, l. 30. (c. A.D. 9) Referring to the Metamorphoses.

Farewell therefore the fine and filed phrases of Cicero.

JOHN LILLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 155. (1579) Leave to the tyro's hand

The limp and shapeless style;

See that thy form demand

The labour of the file.

AUSTIN DOBSON, Ars Victrix. (c. 1885) Imitated from Théophile Gautier.

2 Knowledge is the foundation and source of good writing. (Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et fons.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 309. (20 B.C.) Sound judgment is the ground of writing well.

DILLON, tr., Art of Poetry, l. 342. (1680)

3 Put your parchment in the closet and keep it back until the ninth year. (Nonumque prematur in annum, | membranis intus positus.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 388. (20 B.C.) There can be no doubt that the best method of correction is to put aside what we have written for a certain time, so that when we return to it after an interval it will have the air of novelty and of being another's handiwork. (Nec dubium est optimum esse emendandi genus, si scripta in aliquod tempus reponantur.)

QUINTILIAN, Institutionis Oratoriae. Bk. x, ch. 4, sec. 2. (c. A.D. 80)

Perhaps the greatest lesson which the lives of literary men teach us is told in a single word: Wait!

LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. i, ch. 8. (1839)

4 The fickle populace has changed its taste and burns with a craze for scribbling. (Mutavit mentem populus levis, et calet uno | scribendi studio.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 108. (20 B.C.) The incurable itch of writing possesses many. (Tenet insanabile multos | scribendi cacoethes.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vii, l. 51. (c. A.D. 120)

Gifford renders it, "The insatiate itch of scribbling."

When once the itch of literature comes over a man, nothing can cure it but the scratching of a pen.

SAMUEL LOVER, Handy Andy. Ch. 36. (1842) Cacoëthes scribendi. The itch to write; scripturience (on purience): [a cliché from] C.18-20; rather literary. This phrase of Juvenal's—he was a great phrase-maker, a coiner of arresting phrases—offsets the Latin cacoëthes loquendi (an irresistible urge to talk).

PARTRIDGE, Dictionary of Clichés. (1941)

5 Wordy, and too lazy to take the trouble to write well. (Garrulus atque piger scribendi ferre laborem | scribendi recte.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 4, l. 12. (35 B.C.)

Of all the arts in which the wise excel.

Nature's chief masterpiece is writing well.

JOHN SHEFFIELD, Duke of Buckingham, Essay on Poetry, l. 1. (1682) The second line quoted by POPE, Essay on Criticism, iii, 164.

The glory or the merit of some men is to write well, and of some others, not to write at all. (La gloire ou le mérite de certains hommes est de bien écrire; et de quelques autres, c'est de n'écrire point.)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Ch. 1: Des Ouvrages de l'Esprit. (1688)

6 Often must you turn your stylus to erase, if you hope to write something worth a second reading. (Saepe stilum vertas, iterum quae digna legi sint | scripturus.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 10, l. 72. (35 B.C.)

The Latin proverbial phrase is "Stilo inverso" (With reversed pen), indicating an erasure.

Hasten slowly; without losing heart,

Twenty times upon the anvil place your work (Hâtez-vous lentement; et, sans perdre courage, Vingt fois sur le métier remettez votre ouvrage.)

BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Chant i, l. 171. (1674)

Blot out, correct, insert, refine,

Enlarge, diminish, interline;

Be mindful, when invention fails,

To scratch your head, and bite your nails.

JONATHAN SWIFT, On Poetry. (1712)

That dry drudgery at the desk's dead wood.

CHARLES LAMB, Sonnet: Work. (a. 1834)

7 The Penne maketh the deepest furrowes, and doth fertilize, and enrich the memory more than anything else, Littera scripta manet [The written letter remains].

JAMES HOWELL, Instructions for Forreine Travell (Arber), iii, 20. (1642) A longer form is, "Verba volant, scripta manent" (Words fly away, writings remain). The French say, "Les paroles vont comme le vent, les écrits restent" (Words fly like the wind; writings remain); the Germans, "Der Mund ist Wind, die Feder ist Spur" (The mouth is wind, the pen is a track).

8 Written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond. (Scriptum est stylo ferreo in ungue adamantino.)

Old Testament: Jeremiah, xvii, 1. (c. 700 B.C.)

9 What I have written I have written. (ὅ γέγραφα γέγραφα.)

New Testament: John, xix, 22. (c. A.D. 110)

The Vulgate is, "Quod scripsi scripsi." This is Pilate's reply to the priest who protested against the title, "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews" (ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν Ἰουδαίων) which he had written and placed upon the cross. It was written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, the Latin being, "Iesus Nazarenus, Rex Iudaeorum," usually represented by the initials, I.N.R.I.

1 A man may write at any time, if he will set himself doggedly to it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, in BOSWELL, Tour of the Hebrides, 16 Aug., 1773.

2 Qui nullum fere scribendi genus non tetigit, nullum quod tetigit non ornavit. (He left scarcely any style of writing untouched, and touched nothing which he did not adorn.)

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Epitaph of Goldsmith. An antithesis already used by Chesterfield in writing of Bolingbroke, and by Fénelon with reference to Cicero. See under ELOQUENCE. It will be noted that Dr. Johnson's Latin, like most of his verse, is on the pedestrian side.

3 Ready writing makes not good writing; but good writing brings on ready writing.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: De Stylo. (1616)

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance. As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.

ALEXANDER POPE, An Essay on Criticism, ii, 162. (1709)

I argue this: the world agrees,
That he writes well, who writes with ease.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Epistle to Fleetwood Shepherd. Epis. i, l. 38. (a. 1721)

What is written without effort is in general read without pleasure.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Miscellanies, ii, 309 (c. 1776) Dr. Johnson is also credited with the dictum, "What is easy is seldom excellent." See Works, iv, 134.

You write with ease to show your breeding,
But easy writing's curst hard reading.

R. B. SHERIDAN, Clio's Protest. (a. 1816) See MOORE, Life of Sheridan. Vol. i, p. 55.

Oh that I had the art of easy writing
Which should be easy reading!

LORD BYRON, Beppo. St. 51. (1817)

4 Our literary masonry, nowadays, is well done but our architecture is poor. (En littérature, aujourd'hui, on fait bien la maçonnerie, mais on fait mal l'architecture.)

JOSEPH JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 256. (1810)

With pen and pencil we're learning to say Nothing, more cleverly, every day.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, Blackberries. (1884)

5 All at once, without having thought of it before, he takes paper and pen and says to himself, "I am going to write a book," without any other talent for writing than his need of fifty pistoles. (Sans autre talent pour écrire que le besoin qu'il a de cinquante pistoles.)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Ch. 15: De la Chaire. (1688)

No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. See BOSWELL, Life of Dr. Johnson, 5 April, 1776.

Write what will sell! To this Golden Rule every minor canon must be subordinate.

2 Give me six lines written by the most honorable of men, and I will find an excuse in them to hang him. (Qu'on me donne six lignes écrites de la main du plus honnête homme, j'y trouverai de quoi le faire pendre.)

ARMAND CARDINAL RICHELIEU, Mirame (c. 1625)

3 In the way of writing without thinking,
Thou hast a strange alacrity in sinking.

CHARLES SACKVILLE, Earl of Dorset, To Mr. Edward Howard. (c. 1680) "Alacrity in sinking" is a quotation from SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii, 5, 12, where Falstaff says, "You may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking."

4 It is ignoble to say one thing and mean another; how much more so to write one thing and mean another! (Turpe est aliud loqui, aliud sentire; quanto turpius aliud scribere, aliud sentire!)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xxiv, sec. 19. (a. A. D. 64)

Seek what to write, rather than how to write it. (Quaere quid scribas, non quemadmodum.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. cxv, sec. 1.

5 I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind.
SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI, v, 3, 66. (1591)

Let not a drop remain in the ink-bottle. (No se te quede en el tintero una minima.)

SYDNEY SMITH. Of Charles James Fox. See LADY HOLLAND, Memoir. Vol. i, p. 231.

LAURENCE STERNE, Tristram Shandy. Bk. ii, ch. 11. (1759)

9 When he [Vergil] was writing the "Georgics," it is said to have been his custom to dictate each day a large number of verses which he had composed in the morning, and then to spend the rest of the day reducing them to a very small number, wittily saying that he fashioned his poem after the manner of a she-bear, and gradually licked it into shape (Carmen se more ursae parere et lambendo demum effingere.)

SUETONIUS, De Viris Illustribus: Vergil. Sec. 22. (c. A. D. 110)

Arts and sciences are not cast in a mould, but are perfected by degrees, by often handling and polishing, as bears leisurely lick their cubs into shape. (Les sciences et les arts ne se jectent pas en moule, ains se forment et figurent peu à peu en les maniant et polissant à plusieurs fois, comme les ours faconnent leurs petits en les leschant à loisir.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 12. (1580)

I had not time to lick it into form, as a bear doth her young ones.

YANKEE

7 He was a Yankee, the very character of whom is, that he can "turn his hand," as he says, "to any thing."

JOHN NEAL, Brother Jonathan. Ch. 1. (1825)
Derivation of "Yankee" is uncertain. Some philologists believe it to be an Indian corruption of "English" (Yengees, Yankees); others that it comes from the Dutch Janke, diminutive of Jan, John, applied by the New Amsterdam Dutch as a derisive nickname to the inhabitants of the New England states.

For full discussion, see O. G. T. SONNECK, Report on the Star Spangled Banner and Yankee Doodle; MENCKEN, American Language: Supplement One, p. 192.

In acuteness, cautiousness, industry, and perseverance he resembles the Scotch; in habits of frugal neatness he resembles the Dutch; in love of lucre he doth greatly resemble the sons of Abraham

FRANCES TROLLOPE, Domestic Manners of the Americans. Ch. 14. (1832)

Jews . . . cannot flourish among Yankees, who are said to out-jew them in trading.

LORENZO DOW, Dealings of God. (c. 1834)

E. A. POE, The Philosophy of Furniture. See The Gentleman's Magazine, May, 1840.

DR. RICHARD SHUCKBURG (?), The Yankre's Return to Camp. (1758) Shuckburg was an officer in the British army under Lord Amherst, stationed at Albany in 1758, and the song is said to have been inspired by the ungainliness of the American recruits. Dr. Edward Everett Hale attributed the song to Edward Bangs, a Boston judge, of whom little is known.

Greeks, Romans, Yankee-doodles, and Hindoos. LORD BYRON, Beppo. St. 3. (1817)

<sup>3</sup> The New Englanders are disliked by the inhabitants of all the other provinces, by whom they are called Yankeys.

J. F. D. SMYTH, A Tour in the United States of America, ii, 366. (1784)

In America, the term Yankee is applied to the natives of New England only.

ADAM HODGSON, Letters from North America, ii, 34. (1824) However, THOMAS TWINING, Visit to the United States, p. 385 (a. 1800), wrote, "We [the British] apply this term, Yankee, to the inhabitants of the United States." See also COKE, Subaltern's Furlough, ch. 11. (1833)

YEA AND NAY

<sup>4</sup> Love God. This is the Everlasting Yea, wherein all contradiction is solved.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. ii, ch. 9. (1831)

<sup>5</sup> Nay has the same number of letters as yea. (Tantas letras tiene un no como un si.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 22. (1605)

The Italians say, "Tanto vale il mio nò, quanto il tuo sì" (My no is as good as your yes); the French, "De oui et non vient toute question" (From yes and no come all disputes).

<sup>6</sup> And never ye to grucche it, night ne day?

And eek whan I sey "ye" ne sey nat "nay."

CHAUCER, The Clerkes Tale, l. 298. (c. 1388)

I like the sayers of No better than the sayers of Yes.

R. W. EMERSON, Journals. (c. 1870)

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 11. (1546)

<sup>8</sup> Let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay. (Hw dē ywār rō val val nai rō oō oō.)

New Testament: James, v, 12. (A. D. 44) The Vulgate is "Sit autem sermo vester: Est, est: Non, non."

To avoid repentance say "Nay" rather than "Yea"; but "Yea" once said, retract it not, for "Nay" that follows "Yea" is culpable indeed.

SALOMON IBN GABIROL, Mibhar ha-Peninim (Choice of Pearls). No. 327. (c. 1050) "Is there anything in the world worse than death? Yes, said I, and that is Nay after Yea."—Ben-hamelech: Preface. The French say, "Yes and No are quickly said, but think long before saying them."

<sup>9</sup> You swore to that.—By yea and nay, sir.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, i, 1, 54. (1595)

He swore by yea and nay
He would have no denial.

UNKNOWN, Merry Drollery, i, 2b. (1661)

YESTERDAY

See also Past; Today and Yesterday

3 I am the child who traverseth the road of Yesterday.

Book of the Dead. Ch. xlii, l. 18. (c. 4000 B. C.)
Nu, Papyrus.

4 On morning wings how active springs the mind
That leaves the load of yesterday behind!

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Satires, ii, 2. 81
(1732) This is Pope's rendering of lines 80 and 81, "Alter, ubi dicto citius curata sopori | membra dedit, vegetus praecripta ad munia surgit."

There are two golden days in the week upon which and about which I never worry. . . . One of these days is yesterday. Yesterday, with all its cares and frets, with all . . . its mistakes and blunders, has passed forever beyond the reach of my recall. . . . And the other day I do not worry about is tomorrow. Tomorrow with all its possible adversities, . . . its failures and mistakes, is as far beyond the reach of my mastery as is its dead sister yesterday.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE, The Golden Day. (1879)

5 And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, v, 5, 22. (1606)

6 Yesterday wyll not be callyd agayne.

JOHN SKELTON, Magnyfycence, l. 2057. (c. 1520)
Well, well (quoth she) what euer ye now saie,
It is to late to call again yesterdaie.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 9. (1546)

Howe great a foly is it for a mortall creature to call agayne (as they saye) yesterdaye.

RICHARD TAVERNER, tr., Erasmus' Apophthegms, fo. 35. (1550)

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II, iii, 2, 69. (1595)

No man can call again yesterday.

NICHOLAS BRETON, Crossing of Proverbs. (1616)

To love, once past, I cannot backward move;

Call yesterday again, and I may love.

JOHN DRYDEN, Aureng-Zebe. Act v, sc. 1. (1676)

'Tis to no purpose to think of recalling yesterday.

SIR ROGER L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop's Fables, ccv,
221. (1692)

Fortune cannot give him yesterday.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1736.

Who can restore yesterday?

(1938) A Chinese proverb.

7 Whose yesterdays look backwards with a smile.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts Nt. ii, l. 334
(1742)

A man he seems of cheerful yesterdays

And confident to-morrows.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. vii, l. 557.

(1814) "Cheerful Yesterdays" was used by Thomas Wentworth Higginson as the title of his autobiography, which was published in

YOKE

8 My yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

He is not so young as he used to be.

MISS MULOCK, Agatha's Husband. Ch. 7. (1852)

I'm not so young as I was.

HENRY KINGSLEY, The Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn. Ch. 37. (1859)

10
The atrocious crime of being a young man, which the honourable gentleman has, with such spirit and decency, charged upon me, I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny; but content myself with wishing that I may be one of those whose follies cease with their youth, and not of those who continue ignorant in spite of age and experience.

WILLIAM PITT, Speech, in the House of Commons, 27 Jan., 1741, in reply to Walpole, the "honourable gentleman" referred to.

If youth is a fault, one soon gets rid of it. (Wenn die Jugend ein Fehler ist, so legt man ihn sehr bald ab.)

GOETHE, Sprüche in Prosa. (1819)

The fault of youth is one which every day corrects. (Mangel an Jahren, ist ein Fehler der sich mit jedem Tage verbessert.)

ZEAL

<sup>10</sup>

Zeal is by no Means the same with Fury and Rage.

Zeal is fit only for wise Men, but is found mostly in Fools.

Zeal, when it is a Virtue, is a dangerous one

FULLER, Gnomologia. Nos. 6067-6071. (1732)

The zeal of fools offends at any time.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles, ii, 1, 406. (1732)

<sup>11</sup>

I do not love a man who is zealous for nothing.

GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. (1766)

Johnson: I remember a passage in Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," which he was afterwards fool enough to expunge: "I do not love a man who is zealous for nothing."

Boswell: That was a fine passage.

Johnson: Yes, Sir: there was another fine passage too, which he struck out: "When I was a young man, being anxious to distinguish myself, I was perpetually starting new propositions. But I soon gave this over; for, I found that generally what was new was false."

BOSWELL, Life of Dr. Johnson, 26 March, 1779.

Goldsmith is supposed to have struck out the second passage because he felt it was too autobiographical.

GABRIEL HARVEY, Pierces Supererogation. (1593)

For Zeal's a dreadful termagant,

That teaches saints to tear and rant.

BUTLER, Hudibras, iii, ii, 677. (1664)

For virtue's self may too much zeal be had;

The worst of madmen is a saint run mad.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 6, l. 26. (1732)

The zeal-pot boils over.

JAMES OTIS, as quoted by JOHN ADAMS, Letters, p. 23. (1774)

The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachments by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding.

MR. JUSTICE LOUIS D. BRANDEIS, Opinion, Olmstead v. U.S. (1928)

<sup>2</sup> He . . . was clad with zeal as a cloke. (Operatus est quasi pallio zeli.)

Old Testament: Isaiah, lix, 17. (c. 725 B.C.)

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Notes on Virginia. (1782)

POMPEY, Epistula ad Senatam. Sec. 4. (75 B.C.)

I have more zeal than wit.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 6, l. 56. (1732)

<sup>5</sup> They have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. (ἔηλον θεοῦ ἔχουσιν· ἀλλ' οὐ κατ' ἐπίγνωσιν.)

New Testament: Romans, x, 2. (c. A. D. 57) The Vulgate is, "Illis quod aemulationem Dei habent, sed non secundum scientiam."

"Zeale without knowledge is sister of Folly":

But though it be witlesse, men hold it most holly.

JOHN DAVIES, The Scourge of Folly. Prov. 57.

(1611) RAY, English Proverbs, p. 24. (1678)

Zeal without knowledge is fire without light

Zeal without knowledge is frenzy.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 146. (1678)

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6069. (1732)

Zeal without Prudence is Phrenzy.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6070. (1732)

"Zeal without knowledge is a runaway horse"; "Zeal is like fire; it wants both feeding and watching."

SWIFT, Thoughts on Religion. (1728)

CHARLES MAURICE DE TALLEYRAND. (c. 1792)

See SAINTE-BEUVE, Critiques et Portraits, iii, 324. Sometimes quoted, "Surtout pas de zèle" (Above all, no zeal). A reflection of the French proverb, "Trop de zèle gâte tout" (Too much zeal spoils everything)

<sup>8</sup> We are often moved with passion, and we think it to be zeal. (Passione interdum movemur, et zelum putamus.)

THOMAS À KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Bk. ii, ch. 5. (c. 1420)

Crime has its heroes; error has its martyrs:

Of true zeal and false what vain judges we are! (Le crime a ses héros; l'erreur a ses martyrs:

Du vrai zèle et du faux vains juges que nous sommes!)

VOLTAIRE, La Henriade. Chant v, l. 200. 5. (1723)

INDEX

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE USE OF THE INDEX

With the exception of a few unimportant variations, every proverb, maxim, and familiar phrase in this book is indexed by at least one key-word, and not only the page upon which it appears is indicated, but also its position on the page, so that it may be found instantly without searching the entire page. The first entry in the index is "A 1, clear grit, 1778:5," indicating the fifth quotation on page 1778. If a quotation has two key-words, it is indexed under both of them and may be found under whichever word occurs to the reader. "Beauty is only skin-deep" is indexed under both "beauty" and "skin-deep," at 140:4, where fourteen other related proverbs, aphorisms, and variations are given. All unusual words by which a quotation might be remembered are also indexed, as well as all proper names. Therefore it is not necessary to remember a quotation exactly in order to find it, but only to remember one of its important words.

If even this much is not remembered, but only in a general way what the desired quotation is about, it should be searched for in the text under the appropriate heading. To make such a search easier, the longer subjects are divided into sections. "Friend," for example, is divided into (1) general proverbs and aphorisms; (2) "Friend: Alter Ego"; (3) "A Friend at Court"; (4) "A Friend in Need," (5) "Friends Have all Things in Common"; (6) "Friends Old and New"; (7) "Friends and Adversity"; (8) "Friends and Enemies"; after which follows "Friendship." Under each section, the entries are arranged alphabetically by author, and under each author chronologically by later authors. Every entry is carefully dated, so that the chronological development of every proverb and aphorism is clearly shown. Where the quotation as given in English is a translation from Greek, Latin, or a modern European language, the original follows in parentheses. (The reproduction of such Semitic or Oriental languages as Hebrew, Arabic, Chinese, and Persian was, of course, outside the possibilities for a book of this sort.) An understanding of this arrangement, which is followed rigidly throughout the book, will greatly facilitate the search for any quotation.

It happens not infrequently that the key-word is wrongly remembered. Burns's "best-laid schemes o' mice an' men" is often misquoted "best-laid plans." Such popular misquotations have been indexed under the wrong word as well as the right one, and Burns's line will be found indexed under both "schemes" and "plans." It is, of course, impossible to foresee all such errors of memory, and when the word as remembered cannot be found, the only thing to do is either to look up some other key-word in the index (the Burns line is indexed also under "mice"), or to search the text under the general subject-heading or section where the wanted quotation would naturally fall.

Indexers differ about some of the niceties of alphabetical arrangement, the principal controversy being between those who insist on indexing straight through alphabetically and those who prefer to index by the first word. In the opinion of the present compiler the latter system is by far the better, because it makes the entry much easier to find, and has been followed not only in the index but also throughout the book in the subject-headings. That it is easier anyone can quickly prove for himself. Here, for example, in the first column is the arrangement as given in the index of this book, and in the second column the arrangement according to strict alphabetizing:

New
New fangled
New Haven
New York City
Newcastle
Newness
News Newspaper

New Newcastle
New fangled
New Haven
Newness
News
Newspaper
New York City

A few other details of the arrangement should perhaps be mentioned. Compound words follow simple words, thus "skin-deep" follows "skin"; proper nouns follow common nouns; foreign language entries follow English ones even if the key-word is spelled exactly the same: thus the French "Action n'est pas la vie" follows all the English entries under "Action." It should also be remembered that certain words are spelled in different ways, such as "blessed" and "blest." Cross-references call attention to this, and both spellings should be consulted. English spellings are of course used in the text for English authors, but in the index American spellings are used throughout, since it would be ridiculous to have separate headings for such words as "Labor" and "Labour." In the text the authors' spellings are followed, no matter how archaic, but for the index all spellings have been modernized.

Although all entries are necessarily brief, it is hoped that enough of the context has been given to render the quotation referred to readily identifiable. Nevertheless it is urged that, if the desired quotation is not found under one key-word, the reader look for it under another, and as a last resort search for it in the text. The editor will be grateful to be told of any entry missing from the index, or of any well-known proverb, maxim, or familiar phrase not to be found in the text, and also of course to have his attention called to any errors. Perhaps he can prevail upon his publishers to include such additions and corrections in a later edition.
